Isleham has no public water supply and the inhabitants are dependent on private sources. These consist of shallow wells in the chalk varying in depth from 10 to 45 feet. There were about 160 of them situated close to houses. Samples taken for analysis from wells in the old chalk pit containing 40 houses, show most were unsafe for drinking purposes. Others were liable to pollution. The refuse from pail water closets was disposed of upon garden ground or allotments. But the borehole for Ely Waterworks was near the railway bridge and the water main supplying the Ely rural district passed through the village. 37 06 16

The RDC scheme for the collection of unburnable rubbish attracted criticism. In the old parts of Burwell the lanes were very narrow and it was doubtful the lorry could get along. Some houses had been left and in others the receptacle had been taken as well. The parish had turned down a cheap scheme which worked well for a dear one that didn't. But Barway and the Fen had help to pay for collection in the past and would now be part of the scheme. The outskirts of Soham would be cleared and the dump shifted to a covered dump at Fordham. In the old area collections were made so casually that to call them collections was an absurdity. 37 06 17

A crowd of several hundred people gathered at Cambridge station to welcome the Basque children refugees who are to be cared for at the Pampisford hostel. They travelled from Southampton in a special coach, arriving tired and a little awed. A conference delegate described his college room: "It was well lighted, but the walls were covered with a chilly blue 'distemper'. The grate had a dreadful purple plaque surround with a horrid mantelpiece and neither the carpet nor tablecloth was clean. As for the bedroom, few servants would have tolerated its meanness; three things were cracked or broken. For closet or bath a man had to go out and round the quad, through a passage and some distance further to a huddle of buildings where baths, w.c.s and urinal were all ill-kept. It is doubtful if the taps had been cleaned since they were put in". 37 06 19 # c.27.5

Sir - The 29 Basque refugee children are now settled in the Vicarage at Pampisford after their ordeal in Spain. There have been heavy initial expenses in creating a home in an unfurnished house not designed for the purpose and insufficiently provided with sanitation. Several firms have supplied goods free or at cost prices and individuals have given their labour in repairing, paintings and cleaning the Vicarage. We hope to employ a cook-housekeeper and charwoman as well as a part-time gardener to grow vegetables for the winter – F.M. Cornford. 37 06 23 # c.45.6

Huntingdonshire Agricultural Committee says that Air Raid precautions would be futile if there was a terrible shortage of food and there was never more than four weeks' supply at any time. Large areas of land have gone out of cultivation and fertility is decreasing as farmers do not maintain agricultural equipment. There has been a continued drift of skilled agricultural workers into urban occupations and this harvest there would be an awful shortage of labour. The new Heath Laundry on Exeter Road Newmarket is housed in an entirely new building with architectural pretensions and is light and airy. The water is naturally hard by softeners have been installed and the machinery reduces the amount of wear and tear to a minimum. A special department is devoted to dry cleaning using non-inflammable fluid which preserves the brilliancy of the colours, something very important in the case of ladies' garments. The girls employed are resident in the town where there is little work for them apart from domestic service and shops 37 07 02

Magistrates heard that the Old Guinea public house in Russell Street was redundant: it sold a little over two barrels of beer a week and there were nine other premises within 400 yards. The Star Brewery was happy for it to close. But brewers Greene King opposed the closure of the The Rabbit in Gold Street. It was a nice clean little house and they had recently made alterations and repairs. It was close to the Burleigh Arms in Burleigh Street and they would not oppose closing that instead. This was agreed. 37 07 02 & a # c.27.4.

Elm disease has attacked some of the trees along the Backs at Cambridge. Some have been topped and others are definitely going bad. But experts believe the disease is not so serious as first feared. A number of trees have recovered and there is no need to be in a hurry to fell those which have been affected. At Sheep's Green and Coe Fen the trees are chiefly willows but some are not as happy as they might be. They could be replaced by cricket bat willows which are pretty trees and the most profitable grown at present, a Forestry expert told Rotarians. 37 07 07b # c.18

Charges levied by the Huntingdon Town Clerk for acting as the Council's solicitor for securing ejectment orders in respect of houses served with demolition orders were described as 'exorbitant' by a councillor. It cost them £5.5s.8d to gain possession of a house rented at 2s.6d a week with another

14 guineas to pull the house down. The Mayor pointed out that the Town Clerk was only a part-time servant and when he did solicitor's work he was entitled to solicitor's costs. The charges were recoverable from house owners. The great difficulty was having to turn people into the street and owners naturally postponed the evil day as long as possible 37 07 07a

A Swavesey grocer told the bankruptcy court that in 1913 he'd bought his house which had been damaged by fire at both ends and had restored it. He started in business in 1925. But trade declined during the agricultural depression and competition became very keen with various stores sending out vans and calling from door to door. Then buses began to take customers to St Ives and Cambridge where they did their shopping and took the opportunity of having a cheap day out. This was the last straw: the bus service was doing great damage to many small shops in villages 37 07 10

During recent floods the water in the Hundred Foot Washes had been held up causing great hardship to occupiers. Yet their drainage charges have greatly increased. The water is let into the Wash area through the Seven Holes Sluice at Earith. But Welmore Lake Sluice which had only been built about five years is unable to cope. The Hundred Foot should be dredged: at Littleport it was only 30 feet wide. Alternatively the water should be let through the Hermitage Sluice into the Old West River and then out at Denver Sluice. But the washes were there for the express purpose of taking flood waters and grazing land was hired under those conditions. The problem is that rivers in the uplands have been cleared meaning water arrives in about a day, whereas it used to take a week. 37 07 14 & a # c.29

Trumpington consisted largely of houses strung out along the main road but new plans for development on land owned by the Pemberton trustees would create a self-contained colony with a recreation ground surrounded by 280 houses. It would allow the village to develop a character rather than being a string of houses, an Inquiry was told. The Council would also like to borrow £13,300 to purchase part of the Cherry Hinton Hall Estate for public walks and pleasure grounds. The Hall might become a headquarters for the propagation of plants. This was likely to be a centre of considerable building development and it would be right to secure such open space 37 07 16 # c.49.4

The Cambs and Hunts Electricity Company plans to erect overhead power lines in Sawston met opposition. Up to 12 months ago they had laid cables underground but this was now too expensive. In Mill Lane the cost would be £183 for overhead wires, but £254 if buried. But SCRDC said that to preserve the amenities of the village, this should not be permitted. The roads could not be called beautiful but putting up poles would make them more unbeautiful. Sawston was a considerable consumer of electricity and the company should meet the cost 37 07 16b.

Newmarket RDC wanted to continue the clearance of unfit dwellings. The first tenants had been satisfactorily rehoused in decent homes, most being eager to take possession of new cottages. At Ashley three dwellings near the Plough Inn were damp and dilapidated; the owner had to bear the cost of clearing them without compensation but she would still own the land. At Cheveley the owner complained that a property had been inspected after phenomenal rain when water from the pond had swamped it, undermining the end wall. At Stetchworth three dwellings at the rear of the 'Live and Let Live' were damp and insanitary, an inspector was told. 37 07 16c & d

Previously warned by the Town Crier, the inhabitants of Sawston gathered for the annual free pea picking. Pails, baskets and sacks were collected for the purpose and passers through the town saw a strange procession. The pickers were started off sharp to time by a blast on the local police constable's whistle. Many years ago, a Sawston squire was deeply affected by the imprisonment of a poor widow who had stolen some peas, and he afterwards grew two acres annually for the poor to pick themselves. On his death he made arrangements in his will for the continuation of the custom. Today the peas are grown on land belonging to Mr R. Driver of Huntingdon Farm. 37 07 22

The Home of Mercy in Christchurch Street is one of the oldest Rescue and Preventive Homes in the country. Miss Meeking, who completed 29 years as manager, had a remarkable understanding of the young girls; many sent to her as 'hopeless cases' were restored to self-respect and received a fresh start in life. In the Home she was affectionately known as 'Mam', but there was no weak sentimentality in her treatment of the girls and she fully understood the need of firmness and discipline. She knew that when they left the shelter of the Home they would meet many difficulties and kept in touch with scores of girls. She was consulted frequently by other moral welfare workers and recognised as a wide and sympathetic counsellor 37 07 22a # c.32.9 # WOMEN

Work on the improvement of the Wash estuary would be very expensive and not only benefit drainage. It could not be undertaken with funding from the Government, but they had no powers to take over the Wash without legislation and that would have no hope of passing. The Ouse Catchment Board were unhappy to have such a liability imposed that not one of them would have thought of accepting. The scheme was an experiment so far as the drainage of the fens was concerned and it would be impossible for internal drainage boards to raise the money. A start should be made on improving the outfall and a large scale scheme for the reclamation of the Wash kept in reserve 37 09 29a & b # c.29

By a majority of one vote Cambridge Town Council voted in favour of establishing the Cambridge Municipal Orchestra of 50 players, the first in the country to be run on a voluntary basis. Being amateur it would only cost £20 a year and the director, Mr Parkinson, would maintain a high standard. But some thought the orchestra's excursions into serious music were very rare and very slight; something should be done to provide serious music and not music of the level of the lunch-hour concerts from the Savoy 37 07 29c # c.69

Dr A.J. Laird has served as Cambridge Medical Officer of Health for 29 years. Since 1908 the death rate, infant mortality, tuberculosis and all ailments had dropped with the possible exception of cancer. There'd been no complaints about the Infectious Diseases Hospital and he'd twice saved Cambridge from epidemics of smallpox. Sir – as a small boy in the 1880s my first impressions of Cambridge were so different from today as to be almost incredible. Cambridge, bounded practically by Mill Road railway gates, Paper Mills Bridge, Hills Road Bridge and Queens' Road was a glorified village. It smacked of medieval times with its Spinning House in St Andrew's Street and bread and butter was retailed in yard length by Varsity tradesmen. The fastest vehicles on the road were the pretty tandem horses in dog carts affected by rich undergraduates and hansom cabs and I remember assisting the shepherd of Mr Joseph Sturton's sheep with his flock to and from Parker's Piece where they were grazed – P.J. Wright 37 08 16

Sir – I came to live in Cambridge as a boy of 13, from a local village. I was one of a family of eight and all of us and our furniture were packed on a farm wagon. It was wonderful to come to live in a town built of bricks, to see Cambridge shops, colleges and commons where we could play. My first impression was of a tollgate near Coldham Lane where we had to pay a toll to enter. I remember his suspicious look until I paid him the ninepence fare and threepence extra providing there was no 'scorching'. I also recollect his need of a shave. We made Stapleford in the first three hours, on to Shelford and rounded the Stone Bridge, Trumpington about noon, to schedule. But then the offside-wheel came off. I alighted at Market Hill, walked down Petty Cury and boarded a horse tram. Sir – London newspapers, suffering from a scarcity of news, have reported unruly behaviour by 18 of the 3,826 Basque refugees in England. Picture 4,000 children from English towns, their nerves wrecked by months of war and air raids, many of them having lost their parents, transported to a strange climate, strange customs and an unknown tongue. Would they all be angels? The refugees at Pampisford have been happy and untroubled. But now we have been asked to take another 30. The great difficulty is to find an empty house large enough. An attempt by an insurgent force to cut the railway at Bartlow Station saw rifle battalions attack on a wide front. A small British machine gun battalion took up a position on the west bank of the River Stour while soldiers demolished bridges to prevent the attackers occupying the high ground at Shudy Camps and Horseheath. Villagers had a fine time watching the ponderous tanks pass by and comparing them with the guns and beautiful horses of the 1912 manoeuvres. It was part of the military exercise simulating that in Egypt before the latest Anglo-Egyptian treaty. 37 08 25 # c.45.6

Late in the afternoon an enveloping movement was successful. Street fighting and sniping was expected and the infantry was served out with an extra supply of hand grenades. The inhabitants thronged the centre of Haverhill eager to see the activity of the military manoeuvres 37 08 27a # c.45.6

The premise behind the military manoeuvres was that production of a new lethal gas was about to start in two underground factories at Yole and Barsey Farm near Balsham and Shudy Camps. Different essentials of the gas were to be made at each factory so destruction of either would prevent production. There was a large influx of visitors to the church parade at Shudy Camps Park where 400 men from various regiments had assembled for the training exercise. Afterwards a band concert was greatly enjoyed. 37 08 31 # c.45.6

A notable improvement in the arrangements for feeding the troops is apparent during the exercises at Shudy Camps. The old travelling cookers, used for the first time at the 1912 manoeuvres, have disappeared and in their place are oil-fuelled cookers on which the food is prepared. After about 20 minutes it is sufficiently cooked to be placed in metal chests made on the principle of the hay-box known to housewives during the Great War where the rest of the cooking goes on until complete. The filled boxes are loaded on to troop carriers and taken to the troops where it is kept piping hot until dished out 'done to a turn' 37 09 02 # c.45.6

The Army manoeuvres now taking place locally should have a beneficial effect on recruiting. The introduction of the motor into all branches of the service has rendered the soldier's task much less toilsome and robbed the march of its old-time discomforts. The present-day Tommy is better provided for and looked after, better fed and more comfortably clothed. Recruits for the three battalions of the 5th Infantry Brigade now in camp at Shudy Camps Park are coming in steadily. It is expected that a further 100 will soon be ready at Aldershot and will probably also be sent there 37 09 04b # c.45.6

Bassingbourn stack fire – 37 09 07a

Stacks, farm buildings, pigs and calves were destroyed in a fire which broke out at Dovecote Farm in the heart of Somersham Fen. The blaze was caused by self-combustion in a straw stack which had become overheated and, fanned by a strong breeze, made short work of the buildings. People hearing the cries of the trapped pigs and calves could do nothing to save them; the animals were roasted alive. The only properties to escape were the horsekeeper's cottage, a granary and a rather large cart shed. Fortunately a threshing tackle had been removed from the stack yard and the horses were in a field out of danger 37 09 07b

Have you ever considered when you've seen police officers riding by in their big new patrol cars what happens to the old motors that have been 'retired' from police service. There must be a market for such second-hand cars. But who acts as salesman and interviews customers? In Huntingdonshire the job has been undertaken by none other than the Chief Constable. Houses in Regent Street were somewhat dark because of the shrubbery in the churchyard but occupants were able to open the windows. They were right in the middle of the farmyard but firemen stopped the flames spreading to the farmhouse and nearby wooden barns, using water from a pond. A plaque to Edward Fitzwilliam was unveiled on the wall of 19, King's Parade, where he lived from 1826 to 1830 and entertained his friends. Mr Frank Brangwyn made the design and Joseph Cribb sculptured the stone which was quarried in Rutland. It honoured a man who brought the wisdom and philosophy of the East to the West. The Omar Khayyam Club had supported the appeal but George Bernard Shaw sent a postcard saying "I am not a Fitz fan. You can do as well without me". 37 10 23a

Cambridge University and Town Waterworks Company's new workshops and depots in Rustat Road would lead to improved service, enhanced efficiency and – sooner or later – reduced charges. The old premises in Bene't Street had been a veritable shambles and disgrace with pipes stored at the disused Cherry Hinton and Fulbourn pumping stations. They would wage ceaseless war against waste by leakage and had a gang of plumbers ready to deal with any emergency 24 hours a day with the promptitude of the London Fire Brigade. 37 10 23b # c.24.2

A new novel deals with the Cambridge of the future. "Thirty Million Gas Masks" by Sarah Campion imagines 'Something like ten thousand Cantabrigians were wiped out (as every schoolboy knows) in the Air Raid of 1939. There are memorials to the Cambridge dead all over the rest of Great Britain. The enemy cared not two buttons about Cambridge but were aiming at London'. In the book a technical mishap on one of the bombing planes releases a new gas which results in the area being evacuated only to be visited by people in gas masks sent by the Government to test the poison-laden country. 37 10 23 c d e # c.45.6 # c.74

Journalist H.G. Hodder told Rotarians he'd started his career at the CDN. He'd reported on the birth of the St Neots quads and on the death of King George V when he was one of 60 reporters crowded into the Feathers at Dersingham waiting for the news. He'd been accused of overdoing the 1937 floods but it was a good story at a rather quiet time and imaginations were stretched slightly. However it meant that the Government did begin to think what might happen in the Fens unless protection is improved 37 10 27 # c.04 # c.29

Four unemployed men were charged with stealing scrap-iron from Messrs Swann Bros, brick and lime merchants. Christopher Swann, the manager, said he was cycling on Stourbridge Common when he saw a handcart beside the hedge alongside the works. It was loaded with 21 fire bars, a grate, pieces of pipe and part of a slow combustion stove. They had been kept inside the mess house in the brick yard and no one was supposed to move it. One of the accused said he thought it was a public refuse pit; he had a crippled father, a mother unable to work and thought a few shillings would come in handy. 37 10 30

At the dedication of a new organ at Histon Methodist church Dr W.H. Rouse said he had an organ which had been in the late Henry Martyn's church. It was rather like a chest of drawers. It was 'played' by putting rolls like sausages through a hole in it; then one turned the handle and the hymns came out! A Histon church once had a similar organ which played four hymns. It was not possible to select any one of the four; the whole four had to be played in strict order. The new organ, built by A. Noterman of Shepherd's Bush was used as a demonstration instrument in the film made by Gaumont-British showing the building of a church organ. Several of the leading cinema organists of the day have played on it. 37 11 01 # c.69.4

kitchen the cooking arrangements were not complete. The spread of population to the outlying parts of Cambridge had made it possible to provide new schools with plenty of land for playing fields. 37 11 05a # c.36.5

The cost of providing and maintaining Ely fire brigade and equipment was considerable and there should be payment if they were to attend fires in the rural area, councillors heard. Only Downham, Sutton, Witcham and Haddenham had fire fighting equipment but no one would work the Haddenham engine. The whole district was now connected to a water supply so parish councils should connect to the mains and erect stand pipes. But the Cambridge brigade had offered their services without any retaining fee and that would be cheaper. 37 11 05b

Ald H.F. Peatling, chairman of the Isle of Ely County Council opened the extension to the County Hall at March with a silver key and then unveiled a tablet in the entrance hall to commemorate the occasion. Parliament imposed an ever-increasing workload which meant more staff; there had been 300 applications for the last post advertised. The Chairman then entertained the whole of the council to a luncheon. 37 11 05c

The treat of severe action had a salutary effect on Cambridge undergraduates during the 'Fifth' celebrations. Last year a number of students were rusticated and others heavily fined by Borough justices. The Gas Company surrounded their lamp posts with barbed wire and fitted specially toughened glass over the actual light. Although a number of the taller standards were clambered up in every case the mountaineers had to return baffled. Not a light was extinguished. However two bus windows were broken with bricks and a pane of glass in a telephone kiosk was smashed. Photographers who used flashlights to take pictures had to retire in face of a barrage of missiles. Police arrested a woman but no serious attempt was made to rescue her. 37 11 06 # c.36.94

The Agricultural Wages Committee increased the minimum wage for an agricultural worker by half-a-crown to thirty-five shillings (about £97 now) for a 50-hour week in summer (48 in winter). Extra hours will be paid at overtime rates. Horsekeepers, cowmen and shepherds should have more. This was still behind the cost of living which had gone up by leaps and bounds. Farmers said the past season had been bad and they could not begin to think about granting a week's holiday with pay. Most men were earning thirty-eight shillings with piece work, harvest and occasional overtime. The rent of cottages for agricultural workers was still often as low as two-shillings and sixpence a week (£7 now). But Mr A.E. Stubbs said farmers would purchase their labour in the cheapest possible market, in just the same way as they bought their store cattle 37 11 06b & c

Sir – I have 4,000 acres in Mildenhall parish so derelict that they cannot be farmed and bring ruin to the families who try it. Given one road to join the five cul-de-sacs and a bridge over the River Lark to a similar road in Cambridgeshire, all these families could get their sugar beet to Ely factory. If the counties won't share the cost of a bridge, a mile of Suffolk road would save the bank where it broke and temporarily corked itself one Sunday morning. Firemen, policemen and airmen watched as Thornhaugh Hall, a Lincolnshire mansion, scene of many smart social gatherings for 30 years, burned itself out. The owner, Mr Stanley Brotherhood, was carried from his bed, where he had lain in for a month, to a servant's cottage in the grounds, while villagers helped salvage furniture. A private lake in the grounds was emptied on to the blaze. Lily ponds were pumped dry. Then the supply of water gave out and the rescue squad stood by helpless while the flames finished their work. Back in 1924 Green End Road and Kings Hedges Road were narrow country roads with hedges on each side and a narrow carriageway in the centre with rough grass margins on either side. Then the Cambridge Town Planning Scheme began to evolve and development started to take place. The Corporation built some wood framed houses on the west side of Kings Hedges Road and the housing society erected houses on the same side of Green End Road. Gradually houses began to appear on the opposite side and then the proposed ring road was agreed. Builders told to keep their houses far enough back to enable the required width but then the council purchased the land and constructed the ring road in front of the properties without any cost to them. The L.N.E.R. have just issued a new lantern lecture on Cambridge that may be borrowed free of charge by societies through the country. The 70 slides, which depict the colleges and other places of interest, should be of real value, because they will awaken interest in our town and University and may be the means of bringing us many visitors in days to come. Suitable reading matter has been prepared by Mr P.C. Fitzgerald beginning at the Round Church and describing a walk around the centre. This is one of 276 sets of lantern slides available from the Railway Company at King's Cross Station. 38 01 01 # c.26.2 # c.46.45

Bottisham Police Court, which is a rather primitive building at the best of times, should be modernised. A large number of cases were dealt with during the year and in some there were five or six witnesses. When they were ordered outside there was no seating accommodation for them, and while waiting they were exposed to the weather. The heating apparatus should also be improved, councillors were told. 38 01 03 & a

Mrs Emma Turner, Cambridge's only centenarian, looks not a day over seventy and stands as upright as she did fifty years ago. Born on 4th January 1838 at East Harling, Norfolk, she has an amazing ability to hold intelligent conversations with a stream of visitors at her cottage in Paradise Row, off Paradise Street. She has not been out of doors for five or six years, but retains all her faculties apart from very slight deafness and is able to sew and read without glasses. The arrival of a telegram of congratulations from the King and Queen brought her much pleasure. 38 01 04

An occupant of the Council Houses, Mildenhall Road, Fordham was charged with stealing two rabbit traps, the property of Major Thirwell Philipson. Charles Howes, an under-gamekeeper, said he went to look at some rabbit traps on the Chippenham Road and saw two were sprung. He could not set them owing to the frost. The next morning the traps were missing. Pc Parmenter testified that he went to the defendant's house and found two wet and muddy traps in the shed. The man said he'd been walking along the road when his dog brought a rabbit and trap to him. He'd got the other from Isleham Pits. He was found guilty 38 01 05

Country lanes in the rural parts of Essex should not be turned into 60ft roads, but should be left for courting couples. Anyway, with birth control, there will be no traffic for the roads in 50 years' time. And all the managers of rural secondary schools are of great age and of one class – nobody below the rank of major is required. They have never attended such schools and would not dream of sending their own children there. Working-class people should be appointed instead, Essex County Council was told. 38 01 06

The demolition of parts of the old Guildhall has meant that several annual functions have lost their normal home. But a Mayoral reception elsewhere than in the Guildhall must surely be unique in Cambridge history. It is symbolic of the happy relations existing between the Town and the University that the Old Schools should have been placed at the disposal of the councillors. Cars containing guests pulled up on King's Parade and a lengthy walk under illuminated awnings led to the Dome Room. The Council Room, East Room, Syndicate Room and Regent House were in use but only the dais where the orchestra played for dancing was decorated 38 01 07 # c.35.7

R.C. Pierce retired as general manager & engineer of the Cambridge Electric Supply Company. Since he came in 1909 the Company has changed almost out of recognition. None of the original generating plant remains; recently the old-fashioned 90 cycle single-phase supply was replaced by the modern 50 cycle three-phase system and whereas when he started the annual output was only 600,000 units now it has risen to 15 million. 38 01 08 # c.24.6

Two wayfarers of the Public Assistance Institution, Union Lane were summoned that, being persons habitually wandering from place to place, they took a five-year-old child with them, thus preventing it receiving elementary education. They admitted they had no fixed abode and the boy only attended school for a few weeks at Long Sutton. The small solemn-faced lad was led into the court and lifted on to one of the benches for the magistrates to see him. He was well-nourished and well looked-after. He had never been neglected. The boy was taken into care though the father could see him once a month. 38 01 08 # c.32.9

After a successful fortnight of the pantomime 'Cinderella', the Theatre Cinema is closing down without any indication as to what its future may be. It was 42 years ago that the New Theatre was opened and has had a great history. Many of our leading actors have appeared and all tastes catered for – comedy, drama, musicals and grand opera. It was the coming of films that changed the Theatre's fortunes and after a hopeless struggle it was converted into a cinema with an occasional week of variety. 38 01 08a # c.76 # c.76.9

One showing the inspection of the Cambridgeshire Regiment by General Kirke caught the spectacle admirably: the marching of the Territorials was transferred to the screen in colour and many town and county notabilities were seen. Another showed the demonstration given by the Cambridge Women's Physical Culture Club, concentrating on the beauty and grace of their movement and showing the great advance they have made in the art of keeping fit by easy, pleasure-giving exercises. 38 01 11a # c.65.6 # c.45.6

Ely water tower on Cambridge Road, was built in 1853 and took water from the River Ouse until 1884-5 when by a deep well was sunk at Isleham. It was designed for a population of only 6,000 – 2,500 fewer than now – and needed to be constantly topped up. In case of war, when supplies of electricity or crude oil might be suspended, the tank would be totally inadequate to meet demand from the sugar factory, brewery and laundry. This was pulled down in 1782 to be replaced by the Guildhall built by James Essex. Now demolition has revealed a fragment of the medieval Guildhall. The LNER is going to make a big effort to ensure that the interior of their trains is kept up to drawing room standard. A staff of travelling train attendants and cleaners is to be appointed who will accompany the train throughout the whole journey. They will ensure an adequate supply of clean towels and soap in the lavatories, remove litter from corridors, dust window ledges and empty ashtrays in compartments not occupied by passengers. When trains stop at stations they will polish up the outside door handles. Where conditions are suitable women will be appointed for this work as it is felt that the feminine touch will yield the most satisfactory results. 38 01 15a # c.26.2

The greater part of the village showed their support in no half-hearted fashion when they crowded —80 of them—into the Meldreth club room. Councillors considered building houses at Boggs Gap, Steeple Morden. The site was damp and would be bad to build on as the foundations would be on gault. It was at the bottom of a slope and water was oozing out all the time. It had a north-east aspect and was at the wrong end of the village. There was no water, electric light or fence and it would prove very expensive. But the Housing Officer said it was the best of three available sites and the purchase had now gone so far that it was impractical to stop it. 38 01 27c

Lieut-Col C.R. Bennett retired after 20 years with the Territorial Army. After service in the First World War he was given command of the 250th Field Company and established its headquarters in Cambridge in 1934. This was the first year of partial mechanisation leading to the loss of all horses and the extra work they made. Parades were less spectacular but were less dangerous to unwary recruits and allowed more training of a strictly engineering nature. His popularity with the troops even survived the task of judging the inter-company tug-of-war which looms very large in importance to the units 38 01 28 # c.45.6

The Great Ouse Catchment Board wanted to complete work on the Marsh Cut, extend the training walls into the Wash and improve the river between Denver and St Germans. Great work in the past has drained the fens, now they needed to keep the tidal waters out. But they would not proceed without further Government help. The fens had become a very valuable national asset and if a national emergency arose they would be of incalculable value. The Hundred Foot Washes had been flooded time after time for the benefit of other areas and that was absolutely ruining it. Half the wash was derelict but although owners could not let their land, they were called on to pay heavy drainage rates. 38 01 28b # c.29

He did an apprenticeship at Barrington, then joined Alec Redhouse's firm of engineers and general smiths at Balsham. He later worked at forges at Linton, Shelford and Stapleford. The Cambridge University Almanac was the subject of a lecture at Cambridge Central Library buy E.A.B. Barnard. Fifty-six slides were shown of etchings which adored the Almanac from 1801 until 1855. The great majority presented views of the colleges and during 54 successive years new subjects were chosen, making an extraordinarily interesting collection of views of Cambridge. J.E. Baldry was probably the best artist in the series and was particularly good with regard to architectural details. He subsequently moved to Hatfield where he died an extremely poor man, leaving 11 children scarcely provided for. Some of the pictures featured people and the lecturer said that the artists made a point of drawing in well-known characters to give life to the pictures, and possibly with a view to increasing the sale of the Almanac. One of the most interesting was the etching of Sidney Sussex College before the alterations took place. Another was that by Burford showing King's College old buildings. This was the most valuable from the antiquarian viewpoint point and a great novel feature was that the name of the College on the wall. Amongst the others the Fitzwilliam Museum was shown as it appeared in 1838 without the approach which was not completed until 1875. The lecturer spoke of the artistic ability of Bradford Rudge, another artist of the series and a competent draughtsman. Amongst his contributions to the Almanac was a superb etching of the church of the Holy Sepulchre. - 38 02 03

Kings Hedges Road was shown as a private carriageway under the Inclosure Award of 1840, so why was it now repairable by Cambridge ratepayers, Councillor Edwards asked. The Town Clerk said that in 1912, when the Borough was extended, part of Kings Hedges Road was handed over by Chesterton

Urban District Council as a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large and in 1934 the County passed over the remaining portion on the same terms. It seemed Chesterton UDC had simply begun repairing the road thus making it a public highway. It was a mistake made in good faith and it would be a waste of time to consider it further. 38 02 03b # c.49.4

Many unscrupulous Cambridge landlords are charging more than they are entitled under the Rent Restriction Act. There should be a crusade against them. One railwayman about to retire on a pension had been paying three shillings and ninepence rent for over 20 years (about £10.04 today). Now this had been raised by three shillings (£8). Tenants in Cavendish Avenue had been told they would have to pay sixpence a week more because the landlady was supplying sanitary dustbins. Huntingdon and St Neots Public Assistance Institutions are obsolete, the latter should be closed and cases of sickness and infirmity concentrated at Huntingdon. Councillors refused the erection of a small cycle shelter in the front garden of a house in Scroope Terrace. There were already two such shelters and it was hard to refuse another. But they had to stop somewhere. This was one of the loveliest terraces in Cambridge and should be preserved. They hoped to get the other shelters removed. When the lake at Madingley Hall was netted the result was not just a matter of kettles of fish but bins full. The ever-growing number of anglers makes such demands on the available fish that annual re-stocking is essential so the Ouse and Cam Fishery Board relies on a number of owners of private lakes who have given permission for some of their fish to be transferred to other waters. The lake at Longstowe Hall has also yielded a large number – once the haul was so heavy that the net broke. Anglers no longer regard fish as something to kill; at one time it was common to see fish left to die on the river bank. Now they are returned at the end of the day 38 02 11b # c.38 : fishing

A recommendation that cars should not be allowed to park in Newmarket High Street for longer than 20 minutes was rejected by Councillors. Such restrictions would be harmful to the trade of the town. One of its greatest assets from a shopping point of view, was the wide High Street which enables people to park. That is what brought them in from villages and to take it away would do tradesmen a lot of harm. Some people have left cars for an unreasonable time, but two hours should be the minimum allowed. Sir Frederick Hiam, a former High Sheriff, died at his residence, Grange Road. He was best-known as an agriculturalist, acquiring many farmers in the Eastern Counties after 1910. He was Director of Vegetable Supplies in the Ministry of Food 1918-21 and toured the Colonies, being knighted for his services. He took a great interest in skating, winning the 220 yards word championship in 1895 in record time and was president of Cambridge Town Football Club. He was a member of the Ouse Drainage Board and chairman of three Drainage Commissioners. His funeral will take place at Ely, where Lady Hiam was laid to rest three weeks ago. 38 02 28

Charles Edmund Brock, the artist, died at his residence in Grange Road. He was chiefly known as a water colour artist and book illustrator, including novels by Charles Dickens and Jane Austen and also did a fair amount of work for 'Punch'. He painted portraits of University worthies, several being exhibited at the Royal Academy, and two portraits of former Mayors, Ald Spalding and Ald Sinker, hung in the Guildhall before the rebuilding. His brother H.M. Brock, another artist, lives nearby. 38 03 01 # c.64

The White Swan was one of four pubs in Norfolk Street; in five years the sale of beer had doubled but spirits had gone down.- working classes could not afford spirits. The licensee had been barman at the New Theatre for 37 years but had to leave when it was converted to a cinema. The Tailors Arms nearby was a beerhouse and it would be better to cut down methylated spirits licences rather than beerhouse licences. Trade at the Gwydir Arms had declined as the licensee, Mrs Newman had got old so the brewery had offered her ten shillings a week for life to give it up. It was one of the 'nicest little houses in Cambridge' and they would add a bathroom if the license was renewed 38 03 04a & b # c.27.4

George Samuel Morley, 76, a retired market gardener of West Row is homeless after his 350-year-old farmhouse was burnt to the ground. It was originally three cottages made of lathe and plaster and thatched but within an hour it was completely gutted. The Health Foods and Herbal Store of Green Street has been established several years and specialises in non-fresh foods of many kinds; unrefined cereals, wholemeal flour, biscuits and cake; choice fruits, nuts, honey & oils – in fact everything nearest to nature and consequently the cheapest for man, woman and child. Part of Sidney Street was closed to traffic following the development of a bulge in the front wall of the premises of Austin & Co., coal merchants. The bulge is sufficiently marked to be easily visible. Last night crowds gathered in the expectation that the wall might fall, but they were disappointed. The landlord of the Old English Gentleman at Harston said trade had increased and 101 new houses had been built nearby. There were plans for alterations with a car park for 30 cars. It had a slate club paying money in sick pay and a darts club where players were accompanied by female relatives who did not drink beer but asked for 'short drinks' he was not allowed to sell. He had to refuse the sale of four or five bottles of gin or whisky on a Saturday. But the licensee of the Coach and Horses said there were already four fully licensed premises for a population of 1,000. If you pooled all their takings in wine and spirits no tenant would get a living – brewers only allowed a margin of sixpence on a bottle of whisky. 38 03 07a

Chicory drying was a highly-skilled job working in very hot temperatures up to 200 degrees. It took weeks to train a man and if he left the gang was thrown out of gear. There were only two factories in England and the market was limited. But the St Ives firm said they had had heard their rivals had a better method of drying and were

Saffron Walden was deserted on five days out of seven & there were days when you could fire a machine-gun up the street and never hit anyone. Plans for a by-pass to relieve traffic passing through the centre would hit trade. But the big hay lorries and heavy traffic would be kept out and private cars would still be able to visit. Without a by-pass streets would have to be widened and houses pulled down. Then there would be precious left for anyone to see. 38 03 12

Padnal fen road at Ely should be finished 18 inches above the existing level to allow it to be better drained. Since the road lies under the bank the pressure of water percolating under it might cause the surface to break up as happened during the recent flood. The filling under the road should have porous material but if this is too expensive then there should be a row of field pipes under the road at the toe of the bank with drains every 200 feet, Ely council was told. – 38 03 15a

Young couples are caught in a trap: they cannot have Council houses until they have produced a family, and they must not produce a family unless they have a proper place to live, Prof John Hilton told the Cambridge Housing Society. The nation was taking no steps to provide houses for young people who wanted to marry. They might try the hire purchase system but are required to find about £50 deposit – where are the working-classes to find such a sum (about £2,700 at present prices). And is it desirable that those starting out should begin by buying a house? They are not settled in their work and may want to move only to find that because of a change in the value of the house, they have lost all they have poured into it. 38 03 16 # c.23

Mount Pleasant folk have had an interesting time seeing a modern workshop and showroom built on a corner site at Huntingdon Road without spoiling the beauty of an old house. Part of the ground below road level at the rear has been made full use of by having a sunk workshop built upon it with steel runners over the lower floor. This does away with the old idea of a car having to be run over a dark pit, when one can neither see to work well or do a job well. Dan Morley, well-known in the motor trade, had got this business going in less than four months. 38 03 19

Two Scotland Yard detectives investigating the death of a farm labourer have inspected the house in which he lived at West Dereham. There is little for them to see as the cottage is now empty of furniture and has been prepared in readiness for another tenant. They also searched a rubbish tip. The man lies buried in the churchyard; the grave is not yet marked by a tombstone but is covered with flowers. It is not expected that an exhumation will take place for some days. He collapsed suddenly at work with a series of convulsive fits. A few days earlier he had pared a corn with a penknife and the inquest verdict was 'Death from tetanus caused by a poisoned corn or chilblain'. 38 03 19a

Twenty-nine Basque children had arrived on 19th June 1937, the youngest aged seven, all fresh from their tragic experiences. The Hostel had moved in January to No.1 Salisbury Villas. Agriculture was in decline: more than three million acres had gone out of arable cultivation within the last 40 years and there were 250,000 fewer men on the land than at the end of the last century. Since the war a large number of farmers had bought their own farms. A lot of them had to borrow money to pay for it. They borrowed up to two-thirds on mortgage and now the land was often not worth the mortgage. Agricultural land should be bought by the community and put in proper order, Labour Party delegates meeting in Cambridge were told. 38 03 21e

Cherry Hinton Hall was a 'white elephant' and should be let as a Youth Hostel. Some 2,000 people a year would use it, spending money in Cambridge. Plans for an indoor swimming pool for Cambridge were rejected by councillors. Swimming was healthy exercise for children and there was no evidence that epidemic diseases were spread by indoor baths. It would help solve unemployment in the building trade and Cambridge was one of the few towns without one. But Saffron Walden baths were built in 1910 when costs were much lower than today and they did not pay. People would still prefer the river in summer time. It would be better to have baths just for children that adults could use in the evening. 38 03 24b # c.38 : swimming

Drummer Street park was made for private cars, and now they seemed to be letting the Bus Company monopolise it; they should find a parking place of their own, a councillor urged. But Ald Starr said it was opened not for private cars but for the benefit of the working men and women who came into Cambridge by bus. Now it was used as a car park by professional and business people who left their vehicles there all morning and afternoon. Coun Stubbs said they were at their wits' end to know what to do with the traffic. It was easy to talk about telling the Bus Company to find a new park, but where could they go? 38 03 25a # c.26.46

The Corporation and innumerable householders have dumped their rubbish there until an area of nearly two and a half acres has been filled to a depth of fifty feet. Now the tipping has got to stop. There is a grave danger that, in the event of a heavy rainstorm, part of the area filled in will be carried over a slender barrier and encroach upon the adjoining pit being worked by the Cambridge Brick Company. Electricity would be supplied to Wicken, Hardwick, Barrington, Orwell and possibly Teversham this year. But the Beds, Cambs and Hunts Electricity Company had to abandon a scheme at Fulbourn because of restriction on the overhead line. Telegraph poles had been passing through villages for many years carrying hundreds of wires without undue problems, but as soon as they come along with an overhead line, exception is taken to that. No one liked to spoil nature but it cost double the price to run cables underground bringing the cost per house up from £2 to £5. Six years ago there were 4,615 consumers, now it was 13,145; the number of electric cookers had risen from 526 to 2,039 38 04 25c

Mr R. Wright's butcher's shop in Ely High Street was completely gutted by fire. The old raftered premises and a quantity of fat offered a good hold for the flames which cast a glow over the whole city and only the skeleton of the building now remains. Everything was destroyed, including the whole stock of meat with the exception of that in the refrigerator; tinned stuffs were piled up on the floor with the charred remains of sides of beef, pork, carcases of mutton and sausages. Mr Wright and his family have been rendered homeless and residents of the adjoining property, which was considerably damaged, have had to seek shelter elsewhere. The blaze roused the whole city 38 04 26 38, 38 04 26a

Royston cattle market is finished, it would be better if the pens were cleared away tomorrow and the Market House done away with so the space could be converted into a parking place for cars, Royston Council was told. But James Hargreaves objected to the proposed Market Hill Compulsory Purchase Order. He owned the market rights and was entitled to also receive tolls payable at the annual fair. The proposal would serious affect the amenities of the market, the fair and the rights of stallage, he claimed. 38 04 28

The proposed new buildings for St John's College involve the immediate erection of buildings to complete the present Chapel Court with wings projecting beyond to the north and east. These should be ready for occupation by Michaelmas 1939, including 50 undergraduates and ten fellows' sets of rooms. There will be an open court facing Bridge Street should the houses eventually be taken down and the road widened and ultimately a riverside court overlooking Magdalene 38 04 30 & a # c.44.5 # c.46.5

Air Raid Precaution plans contemplate the division of Cambridge into three main areas each of which could be operated separately in the event of communication being destroyed in an air raid on one or more of the river or railway bridges. The total personnel required should be not less than 3,300 with street wardens dealing with about 500 people. The existing staff of the Corporation, Water, Gas and Electricity companies will form a strong nucleus of the personnel required and are being trained in anti-gas measures There will have to be co-operation between the Borough and County to give mutual assistance in case of need 38 04 30b # c.45.6

Charles Daisley, a library assistant of Coronation Street, was injured when the aeroplane he was piloting crashed at Quy. He was practising forced landings when the two-seater, of which he was the sole occupant, landed in a field and tipped sidewards. The front cockpit was damaged by the engine being forced into it. He was in the rear cockpit but sustained a broken nose and concussion. He was one of the first to join the RAF Volunteer Reserve when they started training in Cambridge a few months ago and was doing part of his 15 days' annual training. 38 05 02b # c.26.1 # c.26.1

Cambridge's air raid precautions are taking shape with council workers and college staff being trained in anti-gas measures and first aid. But volunteers were needed for decontamination, rescue and demolition work and 100 messengers, ambulance drivers and despatch riders were wanted. Cherry Hinton Hall would be an important centre for training and, if necessary, for a first-aid station. The greatest danger in air raids came from high explosive bombs but nothing was included about underground shelters. The Government said there is no precaution against bombing; it was the council's duty to look after the injured and see damaged buildings were taken down properly. 38 05 03 & a # c.45.6

A tablet was unveiled at Ramsey's new grammar school in memory of the late Hon Mrs Broughton. She spent much of her childhood at the Abbey and offered it to the Governors so that its ancient beauty might be preserved. The building dates back to 989 but was extensively altered in the nineteenth century with a new wing. It now houses the headmaster's residential quarters, assembly hall, laboratories and five classrooms. 38 05 06a

In Cambridgeshire villages 700 air raid wardens had been appointed and 251 trained in simple elementary gas precautions. Each resident would be measured for respirators of which there were three sizes. There would be five or six centres with mobile apparatus and men trained to render first-aid, repair bridges and do decontamination work. Mr H.G. Morris had been chief reporter of the CDN for nearly 30 years. In 1911 he was sent out on his push bicycle to collect news of the Army manoeuvres and afterwards Lord Kitchener said his reports were so well done there was hardly any need to publish the usual blue and white papers issued each day. Captain Taylor said Mr Morris need not worry about the future from the financial side. The News appreciated his energy and sound work over the years and the least they could do was to make his future safe and secure. RAF Wyton had a day of tragedy. Five members of the RAF lost their lives in two terrible crashes within an hour of each other. At 10 o'clock a two-seater trainer nosed dived from the clouds into a field at Hilton, leaving the pilots practically unrecognisable. Wreckage was scattered over a large area. Then a Blenheim bomber was taxi-ing along the airfield when the engine failed and the machine toppled over and caught fire. The pilot was thrown out and killed but the observer and mechanic were trapped and burnt alive in the wreckage. 38 05 10 inquest 38 05 12 # c.26.1

A fire which destroyed 295 bales of wheat and barley straw threatened the farmhouse at Wood Farm, Knapwell. It broke out amongst some stacks shortly before 6 o'clock and as a keen wind fanned the flames in the direction of the house, the building was in considerable danger. There were also outbuildings and farm stock in the vicinity. The Cambridge Borough Fire Brigade under P.c. Carpenter were quickly on the scene, and despite water provision difficulties – the only source being a pond – they prevented flames from gaining a hold, although the house was slightly damaged. 38 05 12a

A new mental welfare centre for children was opened at the Fitzroy Hall, Wellington Street. When such a child came of school age he was excluded from school so the mother had to have him at home all day, teaching what she could and preventing him getting into danger. This was in addition to her ordinary work. The child missed the social life and companionship of other pupils. The new centre would allow classes five days a week with the elder girls cooking a hot meal and doing all the laundry and kitchen work. 38 05 14 & a # c.21.5

Councillors heard that three double houses were to be erected at Great Chishill. One large family would occupy each pair of houses and probably remain for a long period of time. In these circumstances it was not necessary that the two bathrooms should each have a bath. If two were fitted one might be used by the tenants as a coal hole or a place for keeping rabbits. And the mothers would not thank them for having two baths to keep clean. While she was watching some children in one bathroom the others would be running water in the other and doing mischief. But the pipes should be fitted so the room could be used as a bedroom. Later, when the properties were occupied by two families then another bath could be installed 38 05 19

A most spectacular crash occurred at Royston Cross when a six-wheeled lorry laden with five tons of cardboard was struck by another six-wheeler carrying 14 tons of bricks. It was only by a miracle that the drivers escaped death. The wooden bodywork of one lorry was broken in half by the impact and the front of the other was completely smashed in. The force of the crash drove one into the front of Beale's Corner Café. Cawdle Fen Drainage Commissioners were sued by a farmer whose land was flooded in 1936 and 1937 when water flowed across the railway line. The sluice gates in the lock had been worn out for tears and water leaked back into the fen. The drains were grown up and had not been 'mudded out' for some time. The gauge on the pumping station was out of place because the fen had sunk. In Lt Thetford they had stopped the old paddle wheel and installed two efficient pumps and it was not possible to drain Cawdle Fen without pumping. Strychnine was found in the body of a farmhand that was exhumed two months after his death at West Dereham. The man had suddenly lost the use of his legs while riding to work on a horse and subsequently died. A doctor had thought death was caused by tetanus poison from an infected corn on his foot. But the inquest showed he'd been administered strychnine on the morning of his death. One of Balsham's oldest inhabitants, Suzan Chambers, figured in a fire drama when the picturesque cottage she had lived in for 89 years was completely destroyed together with the one alongside. Firemen concentrated on saving other thatched buildings and had to damp down the old Tythe barn attached to the Rectory to prevent it being damaged. So rapidly did the flames spread there was no time for salvaging more than a few trinkets and a couple of chairs. It was a pity the night was not warmer but even so quite a few ventured on the river or wandered into the darkness to admire the scene from afar. Rumours are floating around Ely concerning a possible erection by the Air Ministry of a military hospital or landing ground in the vicinity of the city. No official information has yet been given although several sites have been inspected with a view to purchase for some purpose. Mr W.H. Mann who hires 147 acres of pasture land between Lynn Road and the end of New Barnes Road from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners says he has received a letter from the Ministry instructing him to surrender his agreement for 47 acres of his land and vacate his house by the 11th of July. He has no idea as to the use of the land, which is immediately around his house, but has been asked to submit his terms for surrendering it. Accordingly a sale of all the farm effects and stock which includes 600 sheep, 50 cattle and the number of pigs, will take place on July 8th. He is very upset at the short notice

The Government was aware of the danger to civilian populations and had made elaborate preparations. But these would be useless unless the civilian population co-operated. In Germany practically every civilian had been trained so that in the event of an air raid they knew what to do. It was deplorable that men, women and children should be destroyed by the abuse and misuse of science, but they had to be prepared for passive resistance. Cambridge would be divided into 10 minor centres which would act as headquarters for the mobile first-aid parties and there would be five main first-aid posts. At least 1,000 volunteers were needed but at present only 200 had come forward, mainly women. They could not be expected to carry stretchers and do heavy lifting work. A steam wagon loaded with 60 coomb of rye grass seed and drawing a trailer carrying 40 coombs, ran off the road and crashed into the river at Nordelph. As it plunged into the water clouds of steam enveloped the vehicle and the driver experienced considerable difficulty in escaping from his cabin. His mate jumped from the vehicle as it was entering the water. The accident happed as the wagon was turning over Nordelph bridge. The steering gear locked, causing it to crash through the railings. Attempts to salvage the vehicle during the day proved unavailing but the bags of seed were recovered. 38 07 14

The County Council intended building a road and bridge at Whittlesford Station, above the railway and river giving about 15 feet of overhead height. There would be a considerable amount of concrete used in the construction with a series of arches in the viaduct open at each end. These could be closed and made gas-proof at little extra cost, making them suitable for protection from an air raid. But there was only a very scattered population and it was a bad idea to construct shelters at a place where there was an important road and railway 38 07 14e

A farmer claimed his land at Wissington, near Stoke Ferry, had become waterlogged and flooded as the pumping machinery was quite inadequate and broke down frequently. An engineer said the engine was of an old type and the boilers were not strong enough to drive the pump properly. But the Ouse Catchment Board said they'd got a new drainage plant since it broke down in June 1938. Any problem was due to excessive rainfall and seepage from the river Wissey. There were many hundreds of acres of sugar beet in the Aldreth area and the condition of the Causeway made a three-horse job out of a one-horse job, County councillors heard. But Government had already contributed to the Twentypence Road. It would cost about £30,000 including the bridge. Rural depopulation is a serious issue as the influx of people to the towns continues. The towns had all the amenities of life – water, electricity and gas – and men and particularly women would not suffer the lack of comforts which others enjoyed. In the event of air attack schools would be closed for a month as men would not be able to prevent their wives from going out to fetch their children. Many homes had no room in which to build shelters so two types had been constructed in Ditton Lane; one was open and about six-feet deep but there was nothing to prevent a corrugated iron roofing to be placed over the top. The other was covered and had seating. They afforded a greater degree of protection than cellars where there was a great danger of being buried by masonry, a meeting was told 38 09 21c. # c.45.6

The Mayor, E. Saville Peck, writes: "I realise that at this time we are all anxious about the present international crisis. I wish to assure the public that so far as practicable the necessary steps in regard to A.R.P. are being taken to provide protection against both gas and high explosive. Sufficient gas respirators are already in Cambridge and instructions will be issued as to where they can be obtained. First aid posts are being organised and equipped. Householders should consider making small trenches in their gardens for protection of their families in the case of emergency". 38 09 26a # c.45.6

Huntingdon is to establish a police reserve to replace constables called to the colours in the event of war. There will be a retaining fee of £1 to anyone joining with a bonus at the end of the year. Men would be entitled to boot allowance, refreshment and lodging allowances as other members of the force. When called up they would receive ten-pence a day pay. The age limit is 55. Three air raid sirens will be bought for use on the large police cars; they would be useful in the event of a power failure or in areas where there were no other air raid sirens 38 09 26b.

With the delivery of 20,000 gas masks from the Home Office – part of a consignment of 70,000 for the Isle – the Ely depot has been the scene of tremendous activity. Wardens, special constables and members of the public have been assembling them ready for distribution. A census of rooms available in houses will be taken to accommodate people who may be evacuated from London. Territorials have been filling bags with sand at the Barracks ground. They will be used to protect the Drill Hall, which is being made gas-proof 38 09 28b

Cambridge colleges have sent out notices to undergraduates ordering them not to come into residence until further instruction. However examinations will take place as usual and candidates will be allowed to come up for them. Meanwhile preparations continue for the reception of 10-11,000 London children it is planned to evacuate. Church halls and schools will be suitable for temporary accommodation. Women helpers, blankets and rugs are still needed 38 09 29a # c.45.6 # c.36.9

Calmly and without fuss, Cambridge people have started to collect their gas masks in readiness for 'come what may'. A steady stream of callers arrived at all distribution centres. Schoolmistress and volunteers showed each caller the simple method of fitting the masks on. Tragic was the contrast at Milton Road School where during playtime small children shouted 'We want peace' while adults waited outside to be fitted with their masks. It drove home Mr Chamberlain's words "How horrible that we should be digging trenches and trying on gas masks because of a quarrel in a far-away country between people of whom we know nothing" 38 09 29aa # c.45.6

The Mayor said he'd received a telegram that plans to evacuate London children had been cancelled. Later he got another saying they were on their way. They arrived in three motor coaches, the children's ages ranging from six weeks to four years. Accommodation was found at Homerton and Newnham College. Their mothers left the children, aged from six weeks to four years, to the tender mercies of students and returned to London. His scheme is to construct a sub-way car park underneath Cambridge Market Square with inlet and outlet ramps, which, in the event of an emergency, could be converted into an effective shelter accommodating several thousand people. the initial outlay and alleviate the need for suitable garaging for business men coming into the town. 38 10 07 # c.44.6 # c.45.6

At long last a start is to be made on the construction of a railway bridge on Milton Road in place of the present level crossing. Ministry of Transport approve has finally come through and work is expected to take 18 months. One of the biggest attractions at the air display that followed the official opening of Marshalls Aerodrome was the first public appearance of some of the R.A.F.'s news Spitfire fighters. Three of these machines were demonstrated and flew in formation. Other items come first, but it was obvious to everyone was waiting to see the Spitfire. And the show that the Squadron Leader and his colleagues put up in them was worth watching. The display had been opened by a flight of three Hawker Harts which carried out practice routine formation flying. The Cierva Autogiro Company's chief test pilot amused the crowd when he demonstrated an autogiro. He hovered over them disconcertingly and then caused the machine to shoot off suddenly. He also demonstrated the autogiro's amazing taking off and landing capabilities.

Charles Wright of Shudy Camps paid the price of active service in the Great War 20 years after the Armistice when he collapsed and died at his home. He had served in Salonika and afterwards suffered from malaria. His colleagues in the British Legion pulled the old-fashioned bier carrying his coffin draped with a Union Jack along the road which winds to the church. The cortege was preceded by the Legion standard fluttering bravely in a stiff breeze which sang through the leafless trees. Since the death of Canon Thornton the church has had no minister 38 12 02

A young Indian student who incurred debts of over £700 while up at Cambridge appeared at Cambridge Bankruptcy Court. He had received an allowance of between £600 and £700 a year from his parents (about £40,000 at today's prices) which should have been ample for a bachelor student to live on. But he found it particularly easy to incur debts and got in a set which invited him to incur credit. Grocers and their assistants were a very courteous set of people. They supplied a greater variety of goods than any other branch of the retail trade. Quality had gone up and up although the arrangement for opening tins was not yet perfect. A tin should be guaranteed to open with a key but the number of knives and other weapons being ruined by tin opening was beyond computation. With regard to voluntary registration for service in an emergency there were fewer trades that could be as well done by a woman as a man, the Grocers' Association dinner was told. 38 12 09

When Jimmy Overton, retiring secretary of the Trades and Labour Council, came to Cambridge in 1909 no Labour movement existed apart from the Independent Labour Party so he set about forming one. They contested Romsey, the strongest Liberal ward in Cambridge, in 1911 to prove Labour was not just a wing of the Liberal Party. Cambridge's first parliamentary Labour candidate was Rev Rhondda Williams but stories that members of the party pawned their furniture to finance the election are untrue. The Home of Mercy dates back to 1836 when residents concerned about the lack of provision for women, hired Dover House in East Road as a place of refuge. Two miles away was land of thin chalk soil that the owner would be pleased to get rid of; it would make a highly suitable landing ground. 38 12 17

It was a custom in Cambridgeshire for labourers to drag a Yule log into the manor to the accompaniment of singing and to place with the new log a charred piece of the log of the previous year to ensure prosperity to the household. There is also a belief that if a piece of the burnt Yule log is kept in the cellar throughout the year it will preserve the house from fire. Boughs of mistletoe hung outside a door to ward off evil. Snowed Off.—Skating has been in progress this week at Lingay Fen and Mere Fen, Swavesey, but heavy snow on Wednesday put the damper on arrangements for races.—The snow cloak, which Cambridge had been donning over the last few days, was yesterday becoming a bedraggled and dirty gown. After many hours of con¬tinuous snowfall—the longest, if not the deepest, fall for many years—a partial thaw set in, and the typical Christmas scenes slowly changed to a sandy slush, most uncomfortable for those on foot and equally uncomfortable for vehicular traffic. But it is unlikely that even the most hardened lover of the so-called "seasonable" weather regretted the change. After a trying two days of attempting to thaw frozen pipes, and kneeling in the snow to turn off stop taps, it was a welcome change to find water running freely, even though walk¬ing to work meant going through knee-deep snow. In Cambridge 400 men were employed (during the fall of snow) to clear a path for road traffic and pedestrians, and six snow ploughs were brought into use. # c.12

Wedding Rush. A record for Christmas Eve weddings was es¬tablished at the Shire Hall Register Office, Cambridge on Friday. There were 14 ceremonies as against last year's four. They were all coun¬try weddings. Small decorated Christmas trees and other season¬able decorations adorned the Re¬gister Office, to which couples came from as far away as Somersham.

Christmas. Thaw, thaw, thaw was the rhythm of the Christmas weather in Cambridge. It was very much a home and fireside festival this year; in fact, it was everything implied by that phrase "A good, old-fashioned Christmas." The town on Sunday was not as white as the Christmas cards would have the ground appear at this season — the thaw had seen to that — but there, was a covering of snow. Then on Christmas night Dame Nature decided that a party dress was indicated and on Boxing Day, Cambridge awoke to find snow falling and the slush covered with a white mantle. The evening brought with it a rapid thaw. Though weather conditions and the fact that it was Sunday kept most people at home for the greater part of the Christmas Day, there were many who made the early morning journey to church. The cele¬brations this year of the Birth of the Prince of Peace had a significance more emphatic than any attached to Christmases of the re¬cent past. And the fact that of necessity this year it was a family round-the-fire Christmas stressed the bounteous blessings of an unbroken peace.

The wedding took place at St. Matthew's Church, Cambridge or December 25, 1883, between John William Kerry, and Georgina Smith, the officiating clergyman being the Rev. F. E. Rogers. Dur¬ing a very happy married life, Mr. Kerry has carried on the business of a boot and shoe salesman in many villages around Cambridge. He is well known and highly re¬spected by all who have done business with him. In the early days, Mr. Kerry travelled with a horse and van and in these later years, he has had the advantage of the more modern method of transport, the motor car. Both Mr. and Mrs. Kerry have been very active workers in religious and temperance movements for over 40 years as members of the Sturton Street Methodist Church and previously as members of the local Salvation Army.

Stanley, who spoke appreciatively of Mr. Denny's work in the village both as postmaster and also as verger at the parish church. He had done very much for the village and they were all very grateful. Col. Stan¬ley added that it was the 50th Christmas Mr. Denny had spent in the local post office.

Sir – During the last snowfall some bridges were a sheet of ice for a whole week and Garrett Hostel Bridge and Walk were never touched. Neither was any clearing done on Mount Pleasant, one of the most dangerous parts of Cambridge. More lorries are needed to cart away the snow which could be dumped on the Commons, rather than taking it miles to the river. And the by-laws should be enforced – residents in Portugal Street turned out to clear the snow but one of the worst lengths of pavement in Castle Street was in front of the Shire Hall. The Home Office has overruled Cambridgeshire Police on the appointment of detectives. The detective organisation of any force must be adequate not merely for carrying out work in that area but also for co-operating with other forces. Much opposition to women taking holy orders came from a spirit of trade unionism among the clergy, a conference at Ridley Hall was told.. The present position was illogical: women were allowed to give addresses, but seldom to preach and were not permitted to use the pulpit. The ministry of the Sacrament was denied, the priesthood was forbidden. Women had intelligence and wit worthy to be matched against the finest masculine brains and had to receive the opportunity to make full use of their God-given powers. But if they came crowding into the church it would bring competition for male clergy – a job that though poorly paid was safe and still fairly respectable. 39 01 12

The Old West River is very narrow and in normal conditions appears slow, lazy and far from dangerous. But now it has risen above its low banks, covering the washes and lapping against sandbags placed along the A10 road near Stretham Ferry Bridge. Floods.—Ouse Catchment Board men have (in view of the existing floods) reinforced the bank run¬ning alongside the road on the Cambridge side of the bridge over the Old West River (at Stretham). When a Pressman visited the district, he saw flood water lapping menacingly against the sand¬bags. The Old West River, which runs from Earith to just below Ely, is at this point narrow but now it has risen above its low banks, and is covering the washes which extend from the normal water's edge to higher banks running parallel. Willow trees along¬side the normal river, which in summer time afford adequate protection from the sun to the many anglers who sit along the banks, are now half under water. Four large barges are tethered to these trees. They were brought up from Ely loaded with gault to mend the banks in the vicinity. With the continuance of fine weather, the flood water should soon be drained off. A little more snow or rain, however, would bring it over the main Ely to Cam¬bridge Road, and many adjoining fields would be flooded. The Ouse at Holywell is over its banks, and water is within six feet of the Ferry public house. But it has to rise several more inches before it reaches the level of the house. . . . The flood position at Welney yesterday showed little improve-ment, for there is still 3ft. 6in of water over the road across the wash between Welney and the Suspension Bridge at Oxlode. The flood waters from the Old Bedford River have risen slightly at Earith but there is at present no anxiety. Flooding is most severe at Bran¬don Creek and in the Hilgay area. # c.29

The intruder who threatened him, escaped through a window after Mr. Reynolds had looked him in the room. He took with him about £12 from a cash box, but had Mr. Reynolds not returned to the shop for the television pro¬gramme, he might have got away with the whole of last week's takings. # c.27.8

P.O. Attacked.—Police in Cam¬bridge Borough and the County were making an intensive search last night for two men who attacked P.C. Renwick, of the Borough Constabulary. When the constable was examining an un¬occupied house in Clarkson Road, Cambridge, at about 8.50p.m., he discovered that it had been entered and goods had been packed for removal. He was then attacked by two men, receiving head injuries. He blew his whistle, and getting no response, staggered to the house next door where be phoned the police station. At Addenbrooke's Hospital later, several stitches were inserted in wounds in the constable's head.

Rain, Snow, Gales on Wedding Day.—"It rained snowed and the wind blew a gale when we were married 50 years ago. It was very different, from today." These were the reflections of Mrs. Frederick Chapman, when she and her hus¬band celebrated their golden wedding yesterday. They live in a small cottage in Winfold Road, Waterbeach, where they have been for 40 years. Both are now in their 72nd year.

"Specials."—It was reported at Friday's Cambridgeshire Quarter Sessions during the transaction of civil business that there were 1,050 trained special constables in Cambridgeshire.

Four radio devotees at Haddenham were fined for using wireless receiving sets without licences. One, in Lode Way, claimed he was a repairer and had no sets of his own but there were several sets in a shed together with an aerial and he’d charged batteries for years. It was also disclosed that the average annual increase in the number of accounts was over 400.

Queen Again in Cambridge. — The Queen paid her fourth visit and .Queen Mary her eighth visit to Mr. Stanley Woolston's antique shop at Cambridge on Tuesday. The large car in which Queen Mary customarily travels to Cambridge arrived in St. Andrew's Street from Sandringham about 11.40 a.m. Passers-by, who noticed the numerous policemen in the vicinity, congregated near the shop and there were about 150 waiting when the two Queens alighted. As soon as the royal car drew away, more people congregated, and pavements on both sides of the main street became practically impassable for the one hour 40 minutes the royal visitors were inside the shop. They were re¬ceived by Mr. Louis Clarke, Director of the Fitzwilliam Museum, and Mrs. Featherstouhaugh, widow of King George V.'s racing manager. Both the royal visitors made purchases of furniture, china and objects d'-art, and found many things to claim their interest. A crowd of 400 were thronging the roadway at the lunch hour, and at 1.20 the cheers which greeted their Majesties' reappearance were acknowledged both from outside and inside the car. . . . The car was surrounded directly they were inside, and a passage had to be cleared for them to drive away to Exning, where they lunched with Mrs. Featherstonhaugh. # c.02

Cambridge has been scheduled as an evacuation area in event of war. If properties have less than one person per inhabitable room enquiries will be made as to whether the householder was suitable to take unaccompanied children. An old lady or somebody who was out at work all day would not be considered. First aid posts were ready and manned. But during an air raid was the danger of going from a warm bed into a trench in a garden not greater than staying indoors. If you had to remain in a cold trench for hours you might died in a more unpleasant way than if hit by a bomb. 39 01 26a # c.45.6

Shepreth and Meldreth ratepayers objected to the new water extension scheme. Everybody would pay an extra rate, whether they used the water or not. But there were 39 artesian springs in Meldreth that could all be made to run to a small pump. Water supplies in Orwell were inadequate and unsafe, being favourable to an outbreak of typhoid. The Government evacuation scheme made a pure supply a necessity for children coming from London: they would not be used to well water and serious illness might break out. 39 01 27a

Death of a Nonagenarian — Elsworth has lost its oldest inhabitant by the death of Mrs. Edith Brand, who passed away on Sunday at the great age of 97 years.

A Bad Omen.—A correspondent writes: There was some excite¬ment in the village on Monday afternoon, when a flock of fifteen geese was seen passing westward over Melbourn. Old inhabitants and the weather-wise said the geese presaged wintry weather, and they were right, for Wednes¬day was one of the worst days so far of a real old-fashioned winter, with its east wind, snow, sleet and slush.

Floods.—Some of the low-lying fields in the district (Histon) are under water. Farmers and fruit¬growers are experiencing con¬siderable difficulty, and work is being held up as many acres are waterlogged.

Water protest. "A wanton waste of public money" was the phrase used in a resolution carried by a large majority at a crowded public meeting at Shepreth on Monday evening. The meeting was called to discuss the proposal of South Cambs. Rural District Council to supply the village with a main water supply. Of an attendance of between 90 and 100, only six voted against the resolu¬tion, which read as follows: That this meeting of local electors in the village of Shepreth whole¬heartedly disapproves of the pro¬posal put forward by the South Cambs. Rural District Council to supply the village with a main water supply as being utterly and entirely unnecessary and un¬wanted by the majority of residents of the village, and as being a wanton waste of public money. The Chairman (the Rev. C. J. Sharp) drew attention to the fact that there were three public pumps, many private pumps and that Shepreth always had a good supply of water. A remark came from the audience: "What we want is a scheme to get rid of water. We have enough as it is."

The fenland flood situation is very serious, with water six feet above normal. Patrols are watching the banks day and night and additional engineers have been sent in.. At Littleport and Prickwillow waters have encompassed a number of properties and the occupants are preparing to evacuate. With further rain there would be as serious a threat of flooding as in 1937. Now it has been improved with a storeroom and staff room, modern classrooms and cloakrooms with hot water. The Jubilee Clock at Newmarket, a well-known landmark to all road users, has stopped and refuses to start again. The guttering round the tower had split allowing water to get through the roof and rusting some of the pinions. Scaffolding will have to be erected and they hoped to put something over the top of the clock to prevent further damage. But the council does not have enough scaffolding and they may have to call in one of the large builders. Major Griffiths said that when he heard the clock has stopped he hoped the tower had fallen down, but was disappointed. 39 02 01b

Men at Barway worked in mud and water through the night to strengthen the sluice gates which divide Soham Lode from the main river. One large barge loaded with clay was wedged in the mouth of the lode. But when the bank burst huge clods of earth weighing many hundredweights were blown out by the water. The edges of the gap are so sheer and straight that they might have been cut out by a gigantic knife. With the earth went sandbags and all manner of other material used to strengthen the bank. Tarpaulin sheets had been stretched over the top of the bank and held down by weighted sacks. Parts of these are now lying in the water swirling through the gap 39 02 01 & c # c.29

Fen Floods. After a week fraught with anxiety, and over¬shadowed by the darkest fears, the position in the Fen country is now easing. Yesterday a steady fall in the level of the water all round was reported. The watch on the banks of the rivers and lodes of Fenland however continues. Throughout the night 300 men patrolled between the 400 miles of the banks of the four rivers—the Great and Little Ouse, the Cam and the Lark. These patrols, equipped with field telephones, are part of the extensive flood preven¬tion scheme which was organised by the Catchment Board following the floods two years ago. The scheme is now playing a vital part in defensive measures against an¬other flood menace. The news of the gradual decrease in the level of the flood water has brought re-lief to scores of families, who had hurriedly to abandon their homes earlier this week. When the flood waters dropped nearly a foot in some parts on Wednesday, a num¬ber of families returned by boat to their homes and set about restor¬ing order out of the chaos created by the water. At Barway, near Soham, where five families had hurriedly evacuated on Tuesday, there is mow said to be no danger. Yesterday men were working at Barway building a dam to relieve the pressure of Water on the gates of the lode. Steel piles are being driven into the bed of the river. # c.29

Plane's Terrific Nosedive. — Hurtling to earth at the terrific speed of 400 m.p.h., a Hawker Hurricane R.A.F. machine crashed half a mile from Debden aerodrome shortly before four yesterday (Thursday) afternoon. It struck open ground on Pamphillians Farm, Debden, and such was the force of the impact that the plane buried itself nearly 20ft into the earth. It came down like a bomb, and was completely lost to sight, the earth falling back over the remains of the machine. A man some distance from the spot stated that when the plane crashed, earth and mud were thrown high into the air so as to be visible over the tops of the trees. There was no explosion and the plane did not catch fire. Pilot Officer Terence Hugh Knapp O'Brien, in charge of this single-seater fighter was killed instantly. He was attached to 87 Squadron at Debden. R.A.F. men from Debden later recovered the body, digg¬ing their way down to the machine with spades and shovels.

Pilot's Fatal Crash.—Mr. Ralph Ernest Wright, a 19-year-old Ely pilot, set out in a Hawker Hind for his usual Sunday "flip" from No. 22 Training Centre : of the R.A.F. Volunteer Reserve at Marshall's Flying Ground, Cambridge, on Sunday morning. Over Ely he attracted the attention of many with his stunting. His brother Duncan was among the interested spectators, though he did not know at the time who it was in the machine. Later more aerobatics thrilled the people of Chatteris. Then fate took a hand. Sud¬denly, after a double loop, the plane dived from about 1,000 feet towards the earth, straightened out and rose slightly at about 500 feet, then dived again, striking the ground with a sickening thud. The machine narrowly missed a house and buried its nose deeply into the grass turf, killing the pilot instantly. Mr. Ralph Ernest Wright was the second son of Mr. and Mrs. R. Wright, of High Street, Ely. His father told our representative that Ralph had been flying for about 12 months, and was used to flying solo. It had been his ambition to fly. Mr. Duncan Wright said his brother would have celebrated his 20th birthday on Thursday. " I watched the plane stunting over Ely," he said, " but at the time I did not think it was my brother. Shortly afterwards I received news of the disaster. I immediately 'phoned my parents, who were 80 miles away at Holland-on-Sea. In about two hours they were at Ely. My brother had been flying solo for about eight months." # c.26.1

In March 1937 flood waters breached Soham Lode, causing thousands of pounds worth of damage. This year the same bank gave way to the enormous pressure of flood water, bringing a further trail of havoc. Natural seepage and pumps have cleared this away but at Swaffham Prior Fen about 1,000 acres are under water caused through seepage from the banks of the Lodes. Pumps have been going day and night but still farms are isolated and cattle have had to be moved. An exhibition of watercolour studies of old Cambridge yards by Miss Mary C. Greene, which were recently given to the library committee has opened in the Reference Room. Many of the picturesque places depicted now, alas, no longer exist but similar spots are still to be found in Cambridge by those who took the trouble to look for them. Many should be inspired to take up this hunt for them by this exhibition which is valuable both from the artistic and historic point of view. The old-world air associated with the subjects depicted has been delightfully captured by the artist. All the studies have atmosphere and make one regret that the demands of progress have necessitated the alteration of much that is beautiful in the town of Cambridge. In some of the studies one sees spots that still exist, though they now bear the signs of change. Falcon yard, for example, as pictured in this collection, has galleried houses along one side of it. And Ram Yard in 1899 had an archway at one end. The arch was demolished in 1905. Of the yards still much as they were when Miss Greene painted them in the early years of the present century that of the White Horse Inn, now the Folk Museum, and that of the Eagle Hotel stand out. Sayle's Yard too is easily recognisable as is the yard at of the Merton Arms. One scene that no longer exists is to be seen if the study of the Bell Inn and Corn Chambers in Peas Hill, on part of the site now occupied by the new Guildhall. The yard of the old Castle is another scene that now lives only in paint. These and a large number of others makes this exhibition one of the most interesting scene in Cambridge for a long time – 39 02 13a

Centenarian.Willingham's oldest inhabitant, Mr. George Barton, passed peacefully away on Sunday morning at the residence of his son, Mr. Charles Barton, Silver Street, in his 102nd year. Mr. Barton spent the whole of his life in Willingham, and was married at the age of 24 years, when his weekly wage was 9s., and on that amount he and his wife brought up a family of eight children. He was able to work on the land and sow crops until he was over 80. His wife died 31 years ago, and he has survived seven of his children. 1 He had 13 grandchildren and 18 great-grandchildren.

Diamond Wedding. Mr. and Mrs. George Chapman, of Fen Leigh, Smithy Fen, Cottenham, who were married at the Cambridge Register Office on February 1 14, 1879, celebrated their diamond wedding on Tuesday, and were the recipients of telegrams and letters of congratulation. After their wedding, they settled in the vil¬lage and a few years later Mr. Chapman left for Australia, where he worked on a sugar plantation, and later in the tin mines. He returned to his family in the vil¬lage in 1889, and moved to Smithy Fen, where he had been farming until recent years. He was a well-known figure at Cambridge Cattle Market, which he attended for up¬wards of 30 years. Mr. Chapman is 80 and his wife 83. Of their seven children, three daughters and one son are still living, one son being killed in the Great War. They have five grandchildren, two in England and three in Canada, I and five great-grandchildren, also in Canada.

George Pearson of Fen Road Milton said he was about to milk his cows when the whole yard suddenly lit up and he noticed a brilliant white light moving across the sky. There were no flames coming from it; it was something like an electric light. Then there was a boom like thunder – he thought the I.R.A. were trying to blow up the bridge. The meteor was also seen by Mr Ketch of Corporation Terrace, Cheddars Lane; a blue light followed by a red glow passed over him with a whizzing noise and afterwards came an explosion. 39 02 20

Much of the charm depended on traditional cottage architecture but man thatched cottages were derelict and beyond repair. The use of country cottages as 'bolt holes' for the townsman wanting a foot in the country could help preserve them. But it was not to be encouraged from the social point of view of preserving village life. There was one village in Cambridgeshire which was empty during the week and full only at weekends. There were still plenty of thatchers but they were almost all old men, the chairman of the Cottage Improvement Society said 39 02 21.

A labourer of Hillrow, Haddenham said he lived in a portion of the house where the old widow lived. At 10:30 p.m. everything was quiet in his house and the deceased's. At about 11 p.m. while he was asleep there was a knock which awakened his wife. She woke him and told him that the old lady said "Come, Frank I have got a fire".
The lady had told him that if there any time she needed his help she would knock on the back bedroom window. On this occasion she knocked on the inside door. He threw open the back window, saw the flames coming from the deceased's part of the house and told his wife and children to get out as soon as possible.
"I then ran downstairs to her door but it was impossible to get in. The heat was intense and the door frame was falling. I ran around the front door and burst open the door but could not get through a door leading to her front room. When I got the door partly open the fumes and flames beat me back".
The deceased was in the habit of staying up till midnight before going to bed. She always read the bible for an hour before getting into bed. The light in the house was supplied by a paraffin oil lamp. When she read in bed she used a candle in a tin lid. There was not room at the side of the bed for a table but she could possibly have got a chair there. She very rarely used a cold fire but was dependent on heat and for cooking upon the oil stove. She had had no fire in her front room for five years. He never knew of her taking an oil stove upstairs for heat.
Haddenham Fire Brigade Chief said he had to go around the village to call up the men to go to the Fire Engine House. They got to the fire but found the nearest hydrant was a quarter of a mile from the burning building. He had no hose which would reach from the hydrant to the fire.
The only thing he could do was to phone the Cambridge Fire Brigade. Ely was nearer than Cambridge but the local authorities had an arrangement with Cambridge Brigade if they could not cope with a fire. He phoned up at 11:55 p.m. and the fire brigade arrived at 12:40 p.m. In the meantime he had his men tried to put the fire out with the aid of buckets.
There were only seven hydrants from Haddenham to the corner of Earith Bridge period. The brigade had only 200 yards of hoes and owing to not having enough appliances there had been several serious fires in Haddenham.
The coroner commented that the candle might have been the cause of the fire. The death was accidental. But for a village the size of Haddenham the firefighting apparatus was inadequate and many valuable properties were unprotected. If the brigade had had enough hose they could have saved one part of the house but now a man and his family were without a home 39 02 22

No.7 Petty Cury, comprising a double-fronted shop in the occupation of Messrs Lipton, the upper floors providing part of the bedroom accommodation of the Lion Hotel was offered for sale by auction. Shop property in the heart of the shopping centre of Cambridge seldom came to market by public auction and formed an excellent purchase for occupation, speculation or investment. It would be very difficult to find a much better investment. Demand was especially keen in Cambridge where the best shopping area was limited owing the centre being 'horseshoed' by college buildings. But it failed to reach its reserve and was withdrawn at £11,750 (about £650,000 today) 39 02 23a # c.44.6 # c.06

A report proposes a new drainage canal about six miles long, between the Ten Mile River near Denver Sluice and a finishing point near St Magdalen's Bend on the tidal river. The water would be controlled by sluice gates at both ends with a battery of irrigation pumps. This canal would only be used in times of severe floods allowing water in the Ten Mile River to flow interrupted down the new canal, the old sluice at Denver being kept closed. The storage capacity would be sufficient to cope with the accumulation of water during high tide. 39 02 24 # c.29

Boon Retains Title. Eric Boon, the Chatteris boxer, retained his British lightweight title at Haringey Arena last night, when he beat Arthur Danahar, the referee stopping the fight early in the 14th round. This was a thrilling contest between two hard-hitting boxers. Danahar showed clever boxing ability early in the fight, but he was down for two counts of nine in the 8th round, and was saved by the gong at the end of the 11th round. Danahar was again down three times for the same count (nine) in the 13th. When he was down for another count of nine in the 14th round, the referee stopped the fight.

New Appointment for Bishop's Son. Many will offer congratulations to the son of the Bishop of Ely, Mr. F, M. Heywood, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, upon the announcement last weekend of his appointment as Master of Marlborough College. Mr. Heywood, who is 30 years old and married, is the fourth son of the Bishop. He was educated at Haileybury where he became head of the school and captain of the cricket and Rugby football teams, and at Gonville and Caius College, where he was a Scholar of the College and was placed in the First Class in the Classical Tripos. Parts I and II. He won his Blue for Rugby football at Cambridge. After taking his degree at the University, Mr. Heywood went back to Haileybury as assistant master and house tutor. In 1935 he was elected Fellow of Trinity Hall, where he is at present Assistant Tutor and Praelector. Meteor Seen in Cambridgeshire. A meteor was seen in Cambridgeshire on Sunday about the time one was observed in London and near King's Lynn. One of those who saw it was Mr. George Pearson, of Fen Road, Milton, who said it came into view at 6.10 a.m. "I had got up to milk my cows," he went on. "As I stood outside my cowshed, the yard suddenly became lit up. I thought it was a freak thunder¬storm, but when I looked up I saw a brilliant white light moving across the sky. It was like a white hot aeroplane body, and about the same size as an aeroplane would seem to be in the sky. It moved quite slowly in a straight line from the direction of Histon towards Horningsea. Shortly after I first saw it, it seemed to divide; then it was shut out from my view by a shed. There were no flames coming from it: it was something like an electric light . . . The meteor seemed to come through the clouds." # c.12

Mr H.R. Dimock flew over Ely in a Heyford bomber as official observer during the two-hour blackout to test the A.R.P precautions. The night was wet and rain on the windows made visibility difficult and light from the engine exhaust caused a slight haze preventing weak lights from being visible. So he used the revolving turret which was quite open. As they discussed where to drop imaginary bombs the number of lights diminished but there were always about 300 showing somewhere. The railway station was plainly visible and could have been bombed with great precision 39 02 25b

The tragic end of a widow who perished by the flames which destroyed her home led to a special meeting of Haddenham parish council. Had there been sufficient length of hose or more hydrants in Hillrow the house might have been saved. Twenty hydrants at £100 each would never perish in a hundred years. But a hundred yards of hose would perish in a very short time. The council paid three capable people to take charge of the brigade but they got fed up with criticism and chucked the job in. 39 02 27a

Jewish riots, Fascist processions etc were becoming dangerous because of the multitudes of men without a place in the world who were ready to act as hooligans and acerbate every situation. Police Chief's War Prophecy. Huntingdonshire Chief Constable, Capt. J. T. Rivatt-Carnac, caused a Huntingdon and Godmanchester audience at a National Service meeting on Friday to gasp when he declared : "I think we are almost certainly due for another world war, either this year or next." Professing not to be a pessimist, he went on to say: "It is far better to face it. I think it is a mistake to tell people of improving conditions. It is far better to make them out to be worse than they are. To tell people in a voluntary country that they are all right will cause them to slacken and decline to volunteer. If you tell them they are really bad — they are worse now than they were last September -it is only self-preservation to .." The Chief Constable did not finish the sentence. Then, as if sensing the stir he had caused, he said: "I hope I am not being too pessimistic." The only opinions on that came, from other speakers on the platform. Wing Commander Findlay, of Wyton, speaking of the possibility of hostilities occurring, said: "I notice the police are a bit depressed about it." This raised a laugh. Dr. S. J. Lands in the South Level are in greater peril of inundation than ever before owing to the rapidity of flood waters flowing down from the upland due to improvement of the upland water courses and because Denver Sluice in time of flood is impeded by water passing through the Hundred Foot River. Churchyards. A letter from Thriplow, signed "E. T. Hellins" follows up a note I had last week (says Watchman) about country churchyards. It says: "With reference to your note regarding country churchyards, in addition to the ones you mention, I think it is generally agreed that the churchyard at Great Shelford is kept in excellent order. It has been closed for burial for some years — with the exception of the interment of persons whose relatives are already interred there. Another nicely kept one is, or was — I have not visited the place for some years — at Hildersham, close to Linton."

An Old Servant. Mr. John Vincent Bellairs, who spent nearly the whole of his life in the service of one farm, died on Saturday at the age of 66 (at St. Ives). He entered the local office of Messrs. Coote

Before this chapel was redecorated it was much better than some others. Caxton Gibbet Cut Down. The Caxton Gibbet is no more. The famous hanging post, which stood on the side of the Old North Road as a reminder of olden days' justice was cut down by someone unknown on Sunday. "Neatly sawn off" was the way the man-ageress of the Caxton Gibbet Hotel described what she found early on Monday morning. The gibbet was still dominating the scene late on Sunday evening, but on Monday morning only a stump of about six inches was standing. It took eight men to carry the famous oaken sentinel to the hotel yard, where it now lies. "We wish we could find some clue," said the manageress, "but there is "none. Everyone is very indignant about it. Holidaymakers passing through called and wanted to know where the gibbet had gone." The gibbet stood at the side of the Old North Road a few yards from the spot where it crosses the St. Neots Road. It was not knocked down by anything, but carefully sawn through. Though very few of the passers-by must have known it, the gibbet was actually a replica of the one which stood at the spot years ago and had only been standing about five years The site had always been remembered as the scene of old-time hangings, and a notice to this effect was erected prior to the erection of the replica. The 20th-century gibbet was made by the brewers for the hotel. They made it with some very old oak and erected it with the permission of the Society for the Preservation of Ancient Monuments. An official of the brewery went to the spot this week, and it was decided to replace the gibbet. So Caxton will not lose its claim to fame after all.

Air raid precautions. Every house should have a refuge room. A cellar or basement is the best. The stronger the walls, floor or ceiling the better. If possible the room should be without windows. If this is impossible steps can be taken to lessen the danger of the windows being blown in by blast and so perhaps allow the entry of gas-laden air. Sandbags or boxes filled with earth should be placed outside them. Otherwise trenches can be dug seven foot deep with at least two entrances and covered with corrugated iron topped with two feet of earth. It is unlikely that the Water Company's source of supply, the Fleam Dyke pumping station, would be chosen as a target by enemy bombers, but even if it were it is less likely that a direct hit capable of putting both duplicate sets of machinery out of action would be registered. Already the 1st Cambridgeshire Regt. and the 2nd General Hospital has reached war strength and the 250th Field Company Royal Engineers, expect to do so before the end of this week. This is very encouraging progress, and is largely due to the support which has been given to their men by employers, who have promised that the man who comes forward to de¬fend his country shall not risk either being out of pocket or losing his job. Many employers have also been very helpful in promising men who enlist now that they shall have a holiday on full pay additional to the time spent in camp.

Three - Hour Chase. — A cow brought to Cambridge Cattle Market on Monday became enraged and had to be shot after a chase lasting over three hours. In the course of its mad stampede through fences, hedges and gardens it knocked down an old gentleman, Mr. Ernest Warboys of 218 Hills Road. He was not badly hurt, but had to go to bed after being seen by a doctor.

Railway Fireman Injured. — A railway fireman was taken to Addenbrooke's Hospital with injuries to a shoulder after an accident near Cambridge Railway Station on Tuesday morning. He was Arthur Cambridge, aged 38, of 24, Suez Road. He was working near the station when he was caught between a truck and the engine, but his injuries are, fortun¬ately, not serious.

For many couples contemplating marriage, the biggest obstacle is a home. Mr L.M. Parker, a local bricklayer, was faced with that problem in 1935 and set to to build his own. It took him three years to finish but if you go along to 187 Hinton Way you will agree his time has been well spent. Air raid trenches would not protect people in event of air raid. Seven minutes would elapse after the warning before the planes were here. During that time head wardens had to get their wardens out of bed and they, in turn, had to get people out of their beds into the trenches. Under this scheme 30,000 people would be turned out into the darkened streets where there might be a lot of transport. Instead steel shelters should be provided, councillors were told. Cool and Clever Riding. — An exhibition of cool and clever riding, seldom witnessed, even on a racecourse, was seen at Newmarket on Tuesday, when Orange and Green, a big jumper trained by Ryan Jarvis, bolted with the tiny lad, T. Fitzgerald, who was riding him. The horse dashed through the High Street at top speed. Approaching the traffic island at the top of the town, the boy attempted with all his strength to check the horse's pace, but without avail, and disaster seemed inevitable. To the astonishment of the onlookers, Fitz¬gerald managed to get him safely round the sharp turn, and after he galloped another half mile, pulled him up safe and sound.

He lived with his wife and three of their four children at 145 Chesterton Road. "Mr. Pink," continued Mr. Barr, "was hotel porter, and also had charge of the stock rooms, in which capacity he became known to hundreds of people from all parts of the British Isles. Hotel visit¬ors and friends are continually coming and saying, "Where is Harry?" Sir – my criticism of the appointment of Sir Malcolm MacDonald as consulting engineer with the Ouse Drainage Board is that he is 72 years of age. This is rather old for such a tremendous undertaking since the Ouse is probably the most difficult river problem in the world. Death of Mr. John Brignell.—On the eve of his son's 21st birthday Mr. John Brignell, the well-known and esteemed Cambridge builder died yesterday in his 68th year. He had carried on a business as a builder and undertaker for 40 years. He erected many large buildings in Cambridge, but latterly was mainly engaged on Borough Council schemes, one of the most recent being Coleridge Senior School in Radegund Road. Outside his business activities he had many public, philanthropic and religious interests. He had been a member of the Cambs. County Council since 1931, and took a keen interest in the Mill Road Infirmary. He was a staunch supporter of the exten¬sive improvements carried out there and was a frequent and popular visitor. He was a member of the Cambridge Board of Guardians until that body was dissolved. Another interest extending over many years was the Cambridge Salvation Army. The Cambridge Brotherhood claimed his active support over a long period, and for the past six years he had been president. He was an active Liberal in former years, and always retained his faith in Liberalism # c.23

Undergraduates Rush Churchill Meeting.—The 2,500 undergraduates and others who packed the Corn Exchange (Cambridge) full on Friday night, when Mr. Winston Churchill made a striking speech there on conscription, gave, at the end of the meeting, a convincing demonstration of the measure of their support for compulsory military training. By an overwhelming majority, estimated by the Chairman (the Master of Clare) to be about ten to one, the audience carried the following motion: "That this meeting of Cambridge undergraduates gladly accepts the measure of conscription involved in the Military Training Bill, and they express their determination to maintain, at any sacrifice, Eng¬land's power to play her part, and to do her duty for the British Empire and the world causes that are now at stake". Thanking the audience for its vote, Mr. Churchill declared. "Make no mistake about it, what you have done tonight will travel far, and wherever it travels it can do nothing but to consolidate the assurances of peace and freedom throughout the world." The opposition at the meeting con¬centrated chiefly in a block towards the centre of the hall. Mr. Churchill was occasionally inter¬rupted by cheers, ironic laughter, and cries such as "Chamberlain must go," but generally speaking, the meeting passed off quietly. What violence there was occurred outside. Long before the meeting was due to start a queue formed up outside, and after the hall filled, some of those unable to get in attempted to force an entrance. A rush was made on the west door and in the course of the melee, a policeman lost his helmet. Other officers repelled attempts to enter by the main door. A crowd of undergraduates several hundred strong remained in Corn Exchange Street until a proctor ordered them to disperse. All Cambridge police were on duty. # c.45.6

The fire started in a machine in one of the cleaning rooms. This was put out with the aid of a fire extinguisher. The clothing was then put in one of the tanks and was run through a press room. When some of the staff reached the door, however, the handles of the tank burst, and the whole lot went up in flames. The outbreak occurred soon after one o'clock. At the time, the night staff was on duty, and the works manager called the Borough Fire Brigade. It is understood that there was some danger at one time of the fire spreading to a 500-gallon tank of white spirit. # c.27 # c.34.75

The ideal weather has also brought out the blue, yellow and white iris, and also the lovely coloured poppies. Two men from Leeds who stood outside schools and collected old woollen articles from children, giving new coins in exchange were fined. They'd distributed leaflets offering 3d or 6d bits for old clothes with a special consolation prize for the person bringing most wool. But no person who deals in rags should deliver any article to a person under the age of 14 years. The men said they thought cash was money and not articles. But they had convictions to similar offences at Dewsbury, Wakefield and Castleford. 39 06 16

Plane Crash.—A young member of the R.A-F.V.R- at Marshall's Aerodrome received concussion and the sergeant with him slight in¬juries when their plane crashed at Lode on Saturday. Golden Wedding. — On Monday, barely six months after his brother's diamond wedding, Mr. Samuel James Mills, of Haslingfield, celebrated, with Mrs. Mills, a golden wedding. They live at 6, High Street, Haslingfield. At All Saints' Church, in the same village, they were married by the Rev. G. C. Clements, and they have been in that village ever since. Mr Mills, who is aged 74 and a member of a family of seven, retired two years ago from his work as a farm labourer at Messrs. Chivers' River Farm, Haslingfield. He received a long-service medal for 51 years' service there. His brother, who celebrated his diamond wedding in January, was Mr. George Mills, who is also of Haslingfield. Mrs. (S. J.) Mills, who is 67, was before her marriage Miss Annie Flack, daughter of James Flack, of Haslingfield. She works for the local Methodist Chapel. She and her husband had seven children and 19 grandchildren.

Pals Far 50 Years.—One of the secrets of the 50 years of happy married life enjoyed by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Henry Cooper, of Gt. Abington is they have always been pals. What better state of affairs could exist than that?" We have shared alike, even to the extent of sharing the same purse," Mr. Cooper said. "What little we have been able to save for our old days is in our joint names." Mr. Cooper, who is 73, and a year older than his wife has had a busy life. Born in the neighbourhood of Hundreds of Cambridge people will feel a sense of regret at the disastrous fire which destroyed the pavilion on the end of Hunstanton pier. It has always been a popular holiday ground for local families and many cherish happy memories of hours spent on the pier. It was six o'clock on Saturday that the flames burst through and within a few seconds the pavilion was blazing. But by tea-time on Monday a postcard was produced showing the fire at its height. 39 06 17a

A barrage balloon was seen drifting in the vicinity of Saffron Walden during a heavy rainfall. At dawn it was discovered caught on the side of a tree between two fields at Mitchell's Farm. A Royal Institute of British Architect's plaque was unveiled on the new Caius College building in St Michael's Court and a medal presented to the architect, J. Murray Easton. At no time have more buildings of distinguished character been erected and yet many buildings are not very pleasant t live in and certainly unpleasant to look at. This was due to lack of public appreciation of beautiful architecture. Accepting the plaque, the Master said that the building was very popular among the undergraduates. 39 06 23 # c.44.5

Fingerpost Damaged. A Melbourn correspondent writes. The famous old finger-post at the cross-roads in the centre of the village has been damaged. A party of roisterers, on leaving a dance in the Council School on Thursday week, tried to uproot the post and turn it round in order to puzzle passing motorists and lorry drivers. They failed to move the post bodily, but climbing it, managed to dislodge the Royston and London arm. Row¬dyism after dances has not been unusual of late, and villagers are of opinion that something should be done to put an end to it.

Death of sub-postmistress. Willingham has sustained a severe loss by the death of the highly-esteemed sub-postmistress, Miss Kate A. Gadsby, who passed peacefully away after a short illness on Friday at the age of 69 years. Miss Gadsby had held the position of sub-postmistress for 38 years, having succeeded her father, Mr. William Gadsby, who had been sub-postmaster for 23 years. Through all these many years of service, she had always carried out her duties faithfully and with the utmost trustworthiness She will always be remembered for her kindly and cheerful disposition, ever ready to help all with whom she came into contact, especially the old-age pensioners.

Late Mrs. Guy Dale. Mrs. Eileen Primrose (Bobbie) Dale, wife of Mr. Guy Dale, head of the well-known Cambridge firm, died on Saturday evening at her home at Woodlands, Long Road, Cambridge. Mrs. Dale, who was 32 years of age, had been ill for a long time from a disease which she contracted

Lindsay and the late Mrs. Lind¬say, of Jesmond, Newcastle, and Wellington Square, London, she was married on July 25, 1935, at St. George's, Hanover Square, London. Mrs. Dale was greatly interested in all her husband's activities, especially in regard to his work as President of the '99 Rowing Club, and her death will be keenly felt

Sir - The War Office states that no permanent military camp is being contemplated on Royston Heath. I saw the Heath a week ago. Near the road were a number of substantial hutments and tents which look to a war-time soldier very much like dwellings of an advance party. But the rape of common land would make even the War Office careful. The agents of a foreign power can see that the hutments are there and they seem to be occupied by the Royal Engineers. If that information is any importance to a possible enemy why allow newspapers to publish it – H.A. Baker. The camp is headquarters for the anti-aircraft searchlight units around Royston. Death of Mrs. Anderson Scot. Cambridge has lost one of the most-liked of its women personalities by the death in a nursing home of Mrs. Anderson Scott, wife of Dr. Charles Anderson Scott, of Huntingdon Road. Her charm and sympathetic kind - heartedness made her friends wherever she went. A pleasant personality and a keen sense of humour were other attributes which endeared her to those who knew her. She was the same with everyone. "Thank goodness I've only one set of manners for everybody" was a remark she once made. She was for some years Secretary of the local Women's Liberal Club, a member of the Board of Guardians (1920-30), a member of the County Council and various of its committees and a member of the Executive of the League of Nations Union. She spoke through¬out the length and breadth of the county at Women's Institutes, for the local Sisterhood Movement and for the B.W.T.A. In connection with the last-named, she had much to do with the erection of a shelter in the station yard—an example of her great interest in the wel¬fare of the people of the town. She was an ardent worker for the Presbyterian Church. For the last six or seven years she had been an invalid, but her cheerful and philosophical outlook never left her. "Old age," she used to say, "shut many doors, but it opens many windows."

Starlings Galore. A correspondent writes: Melbourn is now, and has been for some time, suffering from a plague of starlings, and it is said by the oldest inhabitant that never before have starlings been so numerous in the village, or so daring. Some have been seen to damage the growing fruit, and as they rarely, if ever, attack singly, but usually in companies their unwelcome presence in such large numbers is a source of worry to fruit growers. A local bird lover says starlings do more good than harm, as they destroy vast numbers of the larvae of the crane fly (better known as daddy-long-legs), cockchafer and other pests. 39 06 30

Midsummer Fires. Motoring through the heart of the Cambridgeshire Fens on the evening of June 23—Midsummer Eve— (writes Watchman), a correspondent was a little surprised, but even more interested, to see an unusually large number of bonfires in the fields. He wondered if the makers of them were aware that they were keeping alive an age-old tradition. Most probably they were not aware of it. In former times it was the custom in the Fens, and in most agricultural districts, to have organised or traditional bonfires in the fields in the evening before Midsummer Day (St. John the Baptist's Day), also upon St. Peter's Day, which is June 29. Why the two bonfire nights are so close together cannot be explained (says the correspondent), but the old-time authorities are agreed that such fire were believed to exercise a quickening and fertilising effect on animals, crops and even mankind, as witness the old Irish custom of driving barren cattle through the flames of a bonfire to ensure progeny. 39 06 30 # c.39

Outstanding Successes. Having shown pedigree Percheron horses, Shorthorn cattle and Middle White pigs at the Royal Show continuously for the past 20 years, it was fitting that Messrs. Olivers should reach the climax of their successes in this year's great centenary show of the Royal Agricultural Society. The firm were second larges exhibitors at the show, making 44 entries, only two fewer than Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, who, however, showed a further breed—Southdown sheep. In all, Messrs Chivers secured five were second largest exhibitors at championships, three reserve championships, nine first prizes, eight second prizes and five third prizes, making a total of 30 awards with their 44 entries. This does not include the milk yield and butter fat test results, which are not to hand at the time of going to press, and in both of which the Dairy Shorthorn and the Lincolnshire Red section. Messrs Chivers and Sons at present stand top yielders for quantity of milk.

30,000 At British Legion Rally,— Some 30,000 of the "old brigade," massed on Jesus Green on Sunday afternoon, cast an approving eye on those carrying on their tradition—over 1,000 of the new brigade, the Territorials, who took part in the huge rally. The old brigade were members of the British Legion attending the Eastern Area's second rally at Cambridge. Their greying hair indicated that it was long since they marched to the war-time tunes played during the rally, but the passage of years had made no difference to their uprightness on parade. Line upon line they stood in front of the platform from which the service, which formed part of the rally, was conducted, medals gleaming on every breast To one side of the serried ranks was a space reserved for the standards, a sea of blue and gold against the green background of the Common At one point in the service the ranks broke into hurried movement as the rain, which threatened most of the afternoon, began to fall, and the Legionnaires donned their mackintoshes A few minutes later it ceased and held off for the remainder of the rally Twenty thousand spectators were in attendance A far wider audience heard the service, for it was broadcast. A feature as remark¬able as the assembly itself was the clockwork precision with which the schedule was kept. A ceremonial march that preceded the service provided an impressive spectacle. Death of Tom Hayward. — The death took place after a long illness at his home in Glisson Road on Wednesday of Tom Hayward, one of the most famous professional batsmen that cricket has even known. He was 68 years of age, and although many years had elapsed since he last played, he still held many records at the time of his death. His name was Thomas Walter Hayward and he came of a famous cricketing family. His father was Daniel Hayward and his uncle, Thomas Hayward, another fine batsman in the sixties. Tom Hayward was born in Cambridge on March 19, 1871, and first came into the public eye by some fine performances when playing with the Cambridge Y.M.CA. He went to the Oval in 1891 and qualified for Surrey by the usual period of residence. In 1892, he played so well for Surrey Club and Ground that he earned himself a trial for the county in the following year. In his second season he was chosen as one of the "Five Cricketers of the Year" in Wisden's Almanack and he actually scored a century in his second county match, against Leicestershire. At the beginning of his career he was a good medium pace bowler and outfielder, but later he concen¬trated on run-getting, and stipulated in his contract with the Surrey Club that he was not to be put on to bowl. When he finished his first class career at the end of 1914, he had made 43,518 runs, with an average of nearly 42, and had scored 104 centuries. He was the first batsman after W. G. Grace to complete 100 centuries, and in 1906 scored 3,518 runs, figures which still stand as the record aggregate for one season. It was at Hay ward's persuasion that Jack Hobbs decided to abandon second class cricket. The two Cambridge men made prolific opening stands for Surrey. Their association began in 1905 and two of their partner¬ships produced over 300 runs and 40 over three figures. In one week in 1907 they topped the 100 four times. On the only occasion on which they played together for England they were not particularly successful. Hayward visited Australia three times, and altogether played in 29 Test matches and batted 51 times. He with … A. C Mclaren against New South Wales in 1901, 352 with Hobbs against Warwickshire in 1909, and 313 with Hobbs against Worcestershire in 1913. During 1906, he achieved the feat of scoring four centuries in succes¬sion, and during the same season he scored 13 centuries. His highest score, 315, was made against Lancashire at the Oval in 1898. # c.38 : cricket

The new Cambridge Guildhall will be opened on October 9th by the Earl of Derby. The grand staircase is much more imposing than the old one, the new small room, complete with carpet, will be very convenient and the large hall improved though it is not nearly large enough for conferences, political mass meetings or big musical enterprises. The new Council chamber also seems on the small side and the aldermanic bench has been considerably shortened. 39 07 22b

Strangers drinking the water in Houghton and Wyton would be risking typhoid or other disease, due to the putrid wells, but the natives were immune, an inquiry heard. The school well was condemned and cottages with pail closets had to bury the contents in an inclosure that seeped into the wells. The supply was from very shallow wells and liable to contamination. The wells were of dried brick, most of the tops being below the surface of the ground. Some were on cultivated plots that were manured. Vicar of Wilburton opposed the rating assessment of the new vicarage: the individual who assessed it took it for a rich eccentric's whim instead of a poor man's house. It was not only small but of a different class to the old vicarage which was a gentleman's residence. That had grounds but this had barely an acre which was to be reduced by widening the road. It was no more than a couple of council houses and too close to the cemetery. It had a flat roof because they could not afford to pay for a pitched one. He'd had nothing but trouble and if there was no reduction he would stop building. The appeal was refused. 39 07 26b

Cambridge Town council held its last meeting at Shire Hall while the Guildhall was reconstructed. The Library committee asked to use the Small Room as temporary reading room during the re-arrangement of the Central Library. But it had a very expensive carpet that might get spoilt. The library might use the Corn Exchange annexe if the cycles were moved. Ald Briggs said that was not a proper alternative: "The fact is that we have had made a beautiful Guildhall, but must not use it". The carpet could be taken up. But the Guildhall might not be finished by that time and it would be unfortunate if people were allowed in the Small Room before the rest were completed. The request was denied – 39 07 28b & c

Waterbeach Aerodrome, — At a meeting of the Cambs. County Council on Saturday, Ald. W. C. Jackson, referring to the proposed acquiring by the Air Ministry of County Council land at Winfield Farm, Waterbeach, as an aero¬drome, said the Council had 20 tenants there. Two of them won cups for the best smallholdings this year; both lost legs in the war. To have men like that turned out was a very serious matter. The County Council had no idea where to find land to put them on. The Committee had written to the County Member drawing his attention to the matter, and had made a strong protest to the Air Min¬istry against the proposal to acquire the land. The reason the Air Ministry gave was that they must have an aerodrome in that district. They said there was nowhere else they could possibly go. Coun. Richards moved, and Coun. Woodman seconded, that the Member be asked to raise the matter in Parliament. The Council felt, however, that the steps taken by the Committee to draw attention to the position were sufficient and the motion was lost. # c.26. 1 # c.45.6

The service was conducted by the Rev. P. H. Potter (Vicar of St. Barnabas). There was a wreath from Mr. and Mrs. Jack Hobbs and another from the Surrey County Cricket Club. A two minutes' silence was ob¬served at 3 o'clock on Saturday afternoon by teams on Parker's Piece.

With Mr. Richard Wheelock, of Magdalene College, Cambridge, he was climbing the Aiguille de la Za, 12,050 ft., opposite Arolla, in the Canton Valais when a rock broke loose and struck Mr. Alexander, who fell 600 feet and was killed. Mr. Wheelock returned to Arolla and a search party re¬covered Mr. Alexander's body and brought it down the same night. Alexander, who was 20 years of age, was an only son. He was studying law at Cambridge, and his home-address was Rachan, Kilmacolm, Renfrewshire. He was an experienced climber, and had mountaineered in Switzerland be¬fore.

Big Black-Out Test.—Cambridgeshire and adjoining counties will be the centre next week of a gigantic black-out test. Twenty-five counties, in which the County and City of London will be included, will be in complete darkness—or as near to it as possible—on the night of August 9-10. More than half of England (from the Isle of Wight up to Lincolnshire, Stafford¬shire and Derbyshire) will be included in the biggest black-out test ever attempted. In all places, except the London region, the test will start at midnight. To meet the special requirements of London, the exercise will begin in that region at half-past twelve. The prospects of the approaching cereal harvest have deteriorated during the last week owing to the abnormal heavy rain. Winter oats, only half the normal crop, are now sodden in the shock. Spring oats, which gave promise of excellent yield, are uncut and battened down. Wheat has stood up to the wet pressure but through damp and humidity now shows sign of rust and blight though barley has held its own. Fruit is a heavy crop but the market value barely covers the expense of picking and distribution. And field peas are practically a failure 39 08 11

10,000 at Gogs Fete.—Throughout the 16 years of its existence, the Gogs Fete has created a remarkable record for inducing the Weather Clerk to show his best and most generous behaviour. When this annual Cambridgeshire Conservative bumper fun-fair, with its penny per hour programme of entertainment, opened on Mon¬day, however, it seemed that 1939 would be an exceptional year—in the wrong sense. Rain in the morning and an overcast sky at lunch-time caused a good deal of anxiety among the organisers and the 500 voluntary helpers, who had visualised hours of assiduous pre-paration reaping but a small harvest. Nevertheless the threat of rain did not prevent thousands of Cambridge and County holiday- makers from joining the stream of traffic, both vehicular and pedestrian, which had assumed large proportions, even by two o'clock, with the Gogs as its objective. The earlier part of the programme was watched by several thousands, and during the afternoon there was a steady influx of people. Shortly after three o'clock the sun emerged from the greyness to the immense relief of the organisers. By tea-time the weather had cleared and the 10,000 people who had defied the clouds entered the carnival spirit of the occasion, unhampered by climatic conditions. They were not under the brilliant sky of last year, but the cooler weather yesterday was almost ideal. For the convenience of the public, the avenues and car parks of the estate were electrically illuminated at night. Mr. Ronald Cross, Par-liamentary Secretary, Board of Trade, was the principal speaker at an evening meeting, which was attended by hundreds. # c.33 # c.38

Cambridge-Lynn Canal.—A new canal from Cambridge to King's Lynn is being considered by engineers of the Great Ouse Catchment Board as a permanent solution to fen flooding. At present, however, the scheme is "in the air." Surveying is being undertaken to see if the scheme is practicable, and if it is found that it is, a full report will be submitted to the Board at a later date. It is prob¬able that the new canal, if it is decided upon, will run from near Cambridge, via Mildenhall, Bran¬don and Stoke Ferry to Denver, and then to King's Lynn, a course which would take the surplus water from the highlands. The cost would be in the region of £2,500,000. # c.29

Owing to failing health, he had to relinquish that position, and was found a suitable job on the Society's staff. He retired on pension on January 13, 1923, but always took a keen interest in the Society and the neighbourhood in which ' he lived. When his health permitted, he always took a daily walk round the Society's premises. # c.27.2

Medals for School Attendance.— My recent note (writes Watchman) about the school attendance feat of a Heydon child has brought me this week the following inter¬esting letter from Mr. T. F. Teversham, of Hillside, Sawston, "Joan Smith, of Heydon deserves our congratulations, but her performance does not reach the standards of a previous genera¬tion. I will quote the case of Mr. Stanley Barker, of Orchard Road, Sawston. He holds the bronze medal, with six bars, awarded by the Cambs. County Council for unbroken attendance for seven successive years, 1904-10, at the same school, Sawston Board School. For a time, also the County Council awarded a silver watch for seven years' unbroken attendance, but by the time Stan¬ley had qualified, the Council had raised the period to eight years, and he was not allowed to stay on for another year to qualify. Mr. Stanley Churchman, also of Sawston, holds the medal and the watch for the seven years' record - altogether, he attended Sawston Board School for eight years with-out being absent, two years at the Infants' School and the six years following at the Senior School. Both these honours were gained during the headmastership of John Falkner, the most noted schoolmaster of' his time in this county. I have no doubt that others gained similar honours at Sawston and elsewhere in this county." # c.36.6

Blinded by the dazzling beam of a searchlight and unable to see his instrument panel, an RAF pilot leaped by parachute from his plane as it dived to the ground and burst into flames at Steeple Morden. Flying Officer Jeff, of Debden, was flying a Hawker Hurricane in formation with two other planes when he was caught by the searchlight. He dare not move out of the beam for fear of colliding with the other planes and, unable to see his panel, got into a spin. He jumped out and landed in a churchyard. The machine fell near a cottage, setting fire to some trees and killing several chickens. There were several small explosions as flames reached the ammunition. Houses Struck. —When lightning struck a new house and general store at Trumpington on Sunday, debris from a chimney stack was strewn over the road and several vehicles had to go carefully to avoid accidents. The incident occurred about midnight. Mrs. A. J. Day, who was sleeping in a bedroom on the side of the premises farthest from the chimney stack, said "When we went to bed at about 10 p.m. there was a lot of lightning. The storm continued, and it was just before midnight when there was a terrible crash. Pieces of the chim¬ney were strewn all over the road, but fortunately the policeman was coming up the street and soon had things in hand. After striking the chimney, the lightning entered the upstairs sitting room down the chimney and through a window, and debris was strewn all over the floor. It ran along the wall into my son's bedroom, but luckily he went on holiday on Saturday. It smashed the electric switch in his room into small pieces. The trail of lightning could be clearly seen in the house. It made two holes in the sitting room wall near the ceiling, ran along the electric wire, and made another hole. The chimney stack was cut in half."— Mr. and Mrs. Lilley, of 22, Hartford Street, Huntingdon, were awakened by a loud explosion about midnight, and, rushing downstairs, they found the house filled with smoke and soot. It appears that a large chimney at the back of the house had been struck by lightning. Most of the structure was hurled to the ground, but luckily the outer walls stood fast, otherwise the whole would have crashed through the roof of the house. No one was hurt, but Mr. Lilley, who is the local manager of the Liverpool Victoria Friendly Society, and his wife were terribly alarmed. The tele¬phone was put out of action.

Cambridge and the Crisis. — Complete confidence in Cambridge preparations against air attack was experienced by Aid. W. L. Briggs (Chairman of the Cambridge A.R.P. Committee) in an interview. In the course of this he said: "I feel that we shall be able, in case of emergency, to put up a thorough working skeleton organisation which we shall make every endeavour to enlarge as the necessity arises. With the volunteers that we have got we have worked persistently to put into operation all the necessary measures. But it must be realised that from the first we have been, from the Government point of view, a non-vulnerable area, and this has restricted us very much in making the preparations which we think are necessary, but every section has persistently and thoroughly worked out the details of their duties. First aid is trained and equipped as far as possible." With regard to the evacuation scheme", Aid. Briggs added: "Everything has been worked out to the fullest detail, both with regard to reception, billeting, feeding and medical attention." # c.45.6

Lloyd's Bank practiced evacuating their staff to air raid shelters in the two strong rooms adjoining the main hall of the bank. Those in Lloyds Bank Chambers used a specially constructed cat-walk over the roof to the fire escape window. The two strong rooms are situated one below the other and a trapdoor will supply a means of escape should one of the entrances become blocked. In the event of a raid customers can accompany the staff or seek the nearest public shelter in wine vaults under Peas Hill 39 08 31 # c.45.7 # c.32.8

The first children who have been separated from their London families by the dark threat of war arrived at Cambridge station. The train contained 800 boys and girls, all had a label bearing their name and address, a few carried a football, several had oranges. They were handed bags containing their rations and helped on to the waiting buses 39 09 01a # c.45.7

The first 600 of the 1,100 children allotted to Huntingdon arrived at the North Station. They were received on the platform by officials and after being given refreshments were taken by a fleet of buses to the districts allotted to them. Other train loads followed at short intervals and are being cared for by Huntingdon residents who are doing all they can to make their little visitors as comfortable as possible. 39 09 01b

An experimental gas mask drill was held for Ramsden Square children. Over 100 assembled and were instructed in the proper use of the gas masks by the senior warden, Mr E. Winkworth. They were told a whistle would sound in the event of an air raid, that the sound of a rattle would indicate a gas attack and a bell would sound when it was safe for them to come from their shelters. Aeroplanes roared overhead as the children were instructed 39 09 01b # c.45.7

Compulsory powers of billeting are now in force in Cambridge. Quite simply it amounts to this. Enough voluntary offers have been received to take in all the children who are coming in school parties. But expectant mothers and those with young children are also expected and householders will be required to house them. The payment is five shillings a week for each adult and three shilling for each child for lodging only. The adults will be responsible for their food. The third class comprise voluntary helpers from the evacuated areas working full time in Cambridge. The payment for them will be twenty-one shillings for board and lodging which will be paid by the Government. 39 09 01c

Protest Meeting. — A protest meeting was held on Thursday evening in the Hempstead school¬room against losing the water of the Fountain. Villagers made indignant expressions against the Saffron Walden Rural District Council for posting on the Foun-tain a notice stating' that the water supply would be discontinued on September 2 as the Council's main supply was now available. The meeting was called by the Rev. T. P. Conyers Barker (Vicar of the Parish), who had been asked by several villagers for an opportun¬ity to discuss whether the Fountain should be closed. Villagers maintain that the Fountain has supplied the village with drinking water for generations past and there was also a great demand by travellers, hikers, cyclists and motorists pass¬ing through. It was emphasised that the water had been analysed from time to time, and was stated to be perfectly pure spring mineral water, always flowing in abund¬ance and recently approved by the Ministry of Health for dairy pur¬poses. It was known as the "Dipping Well" until about 60 years ago, when the overseers of Hempstead village built up the Fountain and it was paid for by subscriptions collected from the villagers. # c.24.2

Villagers Show Appreciation. — The Rev. R. Doble (now at Forest Hill) paid a return visit to Great Chesterford on Thursday week when about 80 people gathered in the schoolroom to greet him- The occasion was a presentation to Mr. Doble by the parishioners of Gt. and Lt. Chesterford in recognition of the services he had rendered to the villages during his 15 years as Rector and Vicar. When Mr. Doble entered the hall, he was greeted with great applause, and after the presentation, "For he's a jolly good fellow" was sung. There were 140 names of subscribers on the list that was lying in the wal¬nut bureau which bore the inscription: "Presented to the Rev. R. Doble by the parishioners of Great and Little Chesterford." Mrs. Green made the presentation.

Strongrooms as Shelter.—A full rehearsal for evacuating the staff at Lloyds Bank, Cambridge, and the various offices in Lloyds Bank Chambers to air raid shelters provided by the two strongrooms adjoining the main hall of the bank was conducted with full satisfaction on Wednesday afternoon. # c.45.6 # 32.8

"Everything is Ready."—Con¬fessing that he hardly expected to find himself opening a garden fete at Newmarket on Thursday afternoon. Capt. F. Heilgers, M.P., said: "The only reason I am able to come here this afternoon is because as far as our country is concerned, everything is supremely ready." Applause and murmurs of "Hear, hear" greeted this statement. Capt. Heilgers was speaking at the garden fete held in aid of the funds of St. Agnes Church in the vicarage grounds. In a short speech he made before declaring he fete open, Capt. Heilgers first made the reference already quoted to Britain's readiness, and then added: "The country is not only ready, but it is steady”

Cambridge had its first air raid warning in the early hours of the morning and hundreds of householders left their beds and adjourned to lower rooms. Others, however, slept through the noise of the sirens. One householder, doubtful about the efficiency of their black-out wrapped a woollen scarf round the electric light. Shortly afterwards they donned their gas masks after noticing a very pungent smell. Later they noticed it came from the scarf which had been charred through. The alarm was caused by the passing of unidentified aircraft over the Eastern Counties. Fighter aircraft went up to investigate 39 09 04

Cambridge is getting into its war stride. After-dark bus services are curtailed owning to lighting restrictions, no cinemas are open and public libraries close at sunset. Banking hours are now 10 to two on weekdays and delays may occur in the collection of cheques. Various museums are taking steps to protect exhibits from damage and already half of the stained glass in the east window of King's College Chapel has been removed. It is being packed and taken to a place of safety. The remaining 23 windows are being left as they are, owing to the enormous nature of the task of removing the glass. 39 09 05a

Blow Falls. — Well, (writes Watchman), the blow has fallen at last. When I wrote this feature last week, there was still hope that hostilities would not break out, but Hitler has decided other¬wise, and now the whole country and Empire is rallying with France to fight for a great principle . . . We enter the conflict regretfully, but resolutely, and fully confident that we shall win through . . . The new lighting restrictions have made progress difficult and strange during the last few days, but we are gradually becoming used to the new conditions . . . One day this week the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries broadcast an important message to farmers and the rural community generally. He said that the farmer's main job is to increase, in an orderly fashion, our home production of essential foodstuffs—a task just as vital to the nation as that which has to be carried out by our armed forces. As far as the immediate after-harvest plans are concerned, the majority of farmers must think in terms of ploughing up more land, both for supply of human food and animal feeding stuffs. The immediate task is to plough up as much land as possible for next year's harvest. # c.45.7

War Measures at Cambridge. — Cambridge, in common with the rest of the country, is getting rapidly into its war stride. Banks, buses and libraries are among the services affected by the situation. Mr. A. Cousin, the Eastern Counties Company District Traffic Supt., said that after-dark bus services had had to be curtailed, owing to lighting restrictions "and of course, the cinema buses are not running at the moment, as there are no cinemas open." He added: "We are running buses up to 10.15 p.m." . . . Both lending departments and reading rooms of the public libraries in the borough are closing by sunset, in view of the lighting regulations. Banking hours have also been altered. They are now from 1.0 to 2 from Monday to Friday and 10 to 1 on Saturdays. They are subject to revision. This week the stained glass in the east window of King's College Chapel was removed. It was being packed and taken to a place of safety. # c.45.7 # c.77.4

Evacuees at Cambridge. — The first of the children who have been separated from their families by the dark threat of war arrived at Cambridge from London on Friday. During the weekend many others arrived and were dealt with. On Friday, numerous helpers gathered at the station. Among them were a number of Rangers who came on duty at six o'clock in the morning to fill the "ration bags" ready for distribution among the evacuees destined for the county on their arrival. # c.45.7

Early Morning Raid Warning.— Cambridge, in common with other towns and districts in East Anglia and the Midlands, had its first air raid warning in the early hours of Monday. Nearly half an hour elapsed before the "all clear" signal was given—about 3.15 a.m. —and in that time hundreds of householders left their beds and adjourned to lower rooms. Others, however, slept through the noise of the sirens. Not until morning was it revealed that the alarm was caused by the passage of unidenti¬fied aircraft over the Eastern Counties. # c.45.7

No Cambridgeshire. — Yesterday's "Racing Calendar" stated that no indication has been received of the withdrawal of the prohibition of sports gatherings. Several meetings, including Newmarket's First and Second October meetings, have been definitely abandoned, and the Cambridgeshire will not take place this year. Newmarket trainers are following the Government advice to the general public, and are carrying on for the time being. Horses are being exercised as usual, although, as there is no immediate prospect of a resumption in racing, strong work is not done.

Death of Mr. Charles Armstrong. —The death occurred suddenly on Saturday at The Grove, Hunting¬don Road, Cambridge, of Mr. Charles Armstrong. He was in his 86th year, and had lived at The Grove for the past 40 years. The late Mr. Armstrong came to Cambridge in 1889 and in the same year bought the Star Brewery from Mr. Bailey. He was Chairman of that company until it was taken over by Tollemache's five, years ago. The Star Brewery is still in existence as a subsidiary of the Tollemache business, and the late Mr Armstrong was trustee for the first debenture holders of the Star Co. He served for a short time on the Cambridge Town Council about 40 years ago, but his chief local interest was the Royal Albert Benevolent Society Almshouses. He was President of the Society, and every year invited the residents to the Grove for an outing. He was a Past Master of the Brewers Co. and a Past Master of the Curriers Co. He had many business interests in London. # c.27.41

War-time Farming Push.—The war has come at a time of the year that gives farming the best possible opportunity to prepare for the great effort it must now make in the defence of our country (writes Watchman). Harvest is nearly finished, and has turned out better than at one time seemed possible. Given reasonable weather, farmers will be able to push on with their normal early cultivations and supplement them with ploughing up even more land, for another 1½ million acres of land must be brought under the plough this coming year. It is an ambitious programme, for we are attempt¬ing in one, year what we only achieved in four years in the last war .... Cambridgeshire and Hunt¬ingdonshire are expected to have little difficulty in supplying and probably exceeding, their allotted contributions towards the 1,500,000 acres of land which the Minister of Agriculture proposes to bring under the plough this autumn. # c.45.7

Night Blaze. — Members of the Fire Brigade and the Auxiliary Fire Service and other helpers, including small boys with buckets, fought a serious outbreak of fire with outstanding success at St. Ives on Friday night. The fire was at the wood yard of Messrs. G. Fuller and Sons, which is close to the railway station and some garage properties. The alarm was given at 6.45, and the brigade arrived to find that the flames had gained a strong hold. So hard did the fire fighters work, however, that within an hour they had the blaze completely under control and had prevented it from spreading further. They left the scene just before midnight. The high tension cable running through the wood-yard represented a considerable danger to the men with the hoses playing on the flames around, and to minimise the risk, the current was cut off in that section.

False Alarm. — It is possible (writes Watchman) to see the funny side of things in connection with the war. I was told the other day of a raid warden in a small village in Hunts., who, on hearing noises which he interpreted as a raid warning, dashed from his house and along the street blowing his whistle and urging the popula¬tion to take cover. He met a party coming out of the "local" and insisted that they should go back until the raid was over. Having fulfilled his duty, he and the villagers sat back and waited for the enemy. But the enemy did not come and have still not arrived. It transpired later that a town a mile or two away (as the crow flies) was having a fire near the railway line. Traffic on the line was temporarily delayed, and an impatient engine driver sounded his engine whistle. It was this which caused all the excitement.

Warning to Pedestrians.—"I do not think it can be too publicly stated that pedestrians should walk facing the oncoming traffic. We have had a lot of cases lately," said the Borough Coroner (Mr. W. R. Wallis) when he held an inquest at the Guildhall, Cambridge, on a 72-year-old farm worker, of no fixed address. The man died as a result of injuries he received when he was knocked down by a car at Stapleford about 11 o'clock on Thursday evening. The Coroner was emphasising the necessity for pedestrians to take special care in view of the present restrictions already more fortunate than others because their jobs would be kept open for them. But they would have to be replaced meaning wages and salaries would be re-duplicated. There was only a remote possibility of villages being bombed but mobile units had been fitted up to deal with casualties and there was a first-aid point in every village It was not practical to provide air raid sirens but a parish could provide one if the Chief Constable approved. Warnings would be given every time a hostile aircraft crossed the coast between King's Lynn and the Thames. If you are in bed at night and the warning comes, you should stop in bed. They were receiving Jewish education and had been told they had to fast on Saturdays, as laid down for members of the Jewish faith. It was too expensive to black out the windows of every school but children must receive a full education. At Outwell boys of 15 were billeted in the homes of fruit pickers who had to return home early to look after them. As a result hundreds of tons of fruit would be ruined. Ely old brewery was completely gutted in one of the most disastrous fires seen for many years. Thirty-five members of the brigade and all available equipment were needed in combatting the blaze. The blaze was at its height at about 7 o'clock when the old portion of the brewery was belching fourth flames to a height of about 60 feet. Firemen armed with the plentiful supply from the River found difficulty in approaching the building owing to the proximity of adjoining property. But with nine jets pouring 1,500 gallons of water per minute on the building they managed to gain the upper hand after a three-hour struggle. Falling debris constituted a grave danger. Huge girders came crashing down from the four-storey building along with brickwork, masonry, flooring and roofing material. The most serious threats were from a tall chimney stack and a huge water tank situated high up in the building. The lower portion of the premises used for bottling ginger beer and for the storage of thousands of bottles were gradually devoured, threatening stock of well over 100 tons of cold. Burning debris fell on cottages on the west side, which abutted Ely's public Air raid shelter. Fortunately, these buildings were well protected with sandbags otherwise, they too might have caught fire. The old brewery buildings were used for the storage of bags by the Beet Sugar Corporation. The building was packed to capacity with them and it is believed the fire was due to combustion caused through the stacks of bags. Only part of the old building remains and police guard were posted around the shell as it is feared that the walls make collapse. 39 09 28

The tree, a summer Pearmain, is believed to be one of the oldest and the only one of its kind, in the village.

Making up pay. — By 31 votes to 22, Cambs. County Council de¬cided on Saturday that they will make employees' service pay up to the amount they had been re¬ceiving in civil life. The decision meant an overthrow of the Staff Committee's resolution, which was that no general resolution be passed to make Service pay up to civil remuneration, but that any cases of hardship be given special consideration. The Committee had also resolved that the Council pay into the Superannuation Fund the employees' contributions and their own In respect of all officers and servants on naval, military or air service.

The Record of Records, — Writing this week from 18, Hillside, Sawston, Mr. T. F. Teversham writes.—"During the past few weeks you have pub¬lished many attendance records. I have kept one up my sleeve, which, I believe, eclipses all of them. It is held by Mr. Frank Barker, of New Road, Sawston. He performed what seems to be an almost in¬credible feat of attending the Sawston Council School for ten years, and was never absent and never late. The particular period was 1897-1901. He started school at the age of 3 plus, and was allowed to leave when 13½, six months before his full time, as a reward for an extraordinary achievement. His wife also attended for 7 years at Duxford School without an absence being recorded against her."

Close Vote. — Cambridge Town Council have decided (by 27 votes to 22) not to make up Service pay of all men called to the Colours to the amount which they would receive in their normal employ¬ment. Additions will be made, however, in the case of men join-ing top before September 15.

"No Truth". — The following message from the Regional Com¬missioner for the Eastern Region (Sir' Will Spens) has been received.—"The Eastern Regional Commissioner has noticed that allegations have been made of food profiteering in the Eastern Region. After making inquiries, he is satisfied that, generally speaking, there is no truth in such reports. On the contrary, the Commissioner finds that the food traders of the Region have, to a marked degree, resisted any temptation to profiteer, and he desires to emphasise the import¬ance and the value of their action. The Commissioner wishes, at the same time, to acknowledge the debt of the Region to all concerned in the production and distribution of food, who, in many cases, have been working for long hours, and, owing to lighting restrictions, in trying circumstances."

Six injured in Smash. — Six people were injured when a Standard Nine car came to grief near Worsted Lodge, not far from Balsham cross-roads on Sunday morning. The car was proceeding in the direction of London, and was overtaking a motor coach at the time of the accident. It is be¬lieved it struck the off-side kerb and then went on to its near-side, colliding with the coach. The car was badly damaged and all its six occupants were injured.

Cambridge business is experiencing a war boom with the influx of thousands of evacuees and fewer facilities for getting to London to shop. A feeling of optimism prevails among tradespeople who point out that although prices will rise in the near future it will not be due to profiteering on their part. The Paris House reports a flourishing sale in fur coats and higher priced merchandise while Mr Hensher of Peas Hill says his shop has been crowed by purchasers of black-out materials, blankets and bedding. Millers say gramophones and wirelesses are selling well and they expect a rush on pianos. 39 10 04a

£4,000 Horse Sale at Histon.—Approximately £4,000 changed hands at the 12th annual sale of Percheron horses at the sale yard, Histon, on Friday. It was one of the largest sales of the breed which has been conducted in Great Britain for some time. The magni-ficent work of the Percheron during the last war gave the introduction of the breed into Britain an enthusiastic reception and the interest displayed at yesterday's sale was a patent tribute to the part to be played by these animals particularly in respect of agriculture, during the present conflict. A feature of the sale, which was attended by a large selection of buyers, was the inclusion of the entire noted prize-winning Aldenham stud, the property of Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan. There were also entries from many other famous studs.

For Evacuees.—A social club for the benefit of evacuees has been started in the village (Histon) and at the first meeting 38 mothers and a good number of babies and young children were present. It is proposed that the club should meet every Monday and Friday at Impington School.

The "Square Pegs" Depart. — Evacuated London mothers and children billeted in the village (Melbourn) are slowly, but surely drifting back to their homes. Exactly how many have gone back is not known, but it is estimated that about 50 mothers, with their offsprings, have left Melbourn since the great influx of September 2 and the few following days. Villagers bravely, and often at, great inconvenience, did their best to make the refugees comfortable, but many refused to settle down, grumbling at the quietness of country life, the absence of a cinema and other amusements, the scarcity of shops and other "inconveniences." The great trouble at the moment, particularly at weekends, is the uninvited and unannounced relatives of the evacuees who descend upon the village and expect to be fed and entertained by the villagers.

Presentation. — Mr. Harry Spencer, for 12 years sub-post¬master at Great Sampford, has taken up duties in the same capacity at Great Shelford. A native of London, Mr. Spencer served in the last war, and on leaving hospital following war injuries, was appointed sub-post¬master at Great Sampford in 1927. While in the village, both Mr. and Mrs. Spencer won many friends for themselves, and the active interest they took in village affairs was much appreciated. At Samp¬ford, Mr. Spencer founded a branch of the Essex County Library and conducted its affairs for five years. For three years he was a member of the Sampford Parish Council, and in addition to taking a keen interest in all the social affairs of the village, helped with legal matters. Mrs. Spencer was for many years secretary of the Great Sampford Women's Institute as well as a member of the Child Welfare Committee. At a large and representative gather¬ing in the Parish Hall, Great Sampford, on Wednesday last week, a cheque for over £15 was presented to Mr. and Mrs. Spencer.

South Cambs RDC discussed a request from the School of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart for the transfer of 300 evacuees from other parishes into Sawston Thirty children had arrived in Ickleton who were dirty, filthy, badly-clothed and badly cared for. They were put into cottages which are clean, bright and healthy and the cottage people had changed them. The children are now clean and tidy, their manners have improved. But if they were taken to Sawston there would be no more evacuees taken in that village. 39 10 06

The small new Roman Catholic chapel on the corner of High Street, Old Chesterton is a corrugated iron structure but its lines are good and the interior fittings and decoration are in excellent taste. After the Reformation there was no Catholic church in Cambridge. Then Mass began to be said in the room of a house and in 1841 a small church opened in Union Lane. This was supplanted in 1890 by the fine building in Hills Road. Now there are large congregations at four Masses every Sunday and two other chapels of ease beside the one now opened. 39 10 09 # c.83

The majority of basements in Cambridge are useless as public air raid shelters since they need to be capable of holding between 50 and 100 people. But those at Herbert Robinson's Garage in Regent Street, Zion Baptist Church, Mr Wheatley's in Sturton Street and Potts' Mineral Water Works in Castle Street are suitable. However these are not enough and shelters should be constructed in various areas. They will be of brick and concrete and accommodate 50 people. Shelters in schools should be available for the public during the night and at week-ends.39 10 09a # c.45.7

No action will be taken against schoolboys aged 12 and over who are absent from school assisting the harvest. But there were a great many women volunteering for the land who were not being engaged – why should children be used as cheap labour. There was no need to employ boys and girls of that age. Coun Taylor said it was only a question of boys leading horses but this meant breaking off education during the last few months when a boy could be educated.39 10 13

An Ely police constable told the court he was cycling with another officer along Cambridge Road on the first night of the black-out when he was struck by a van. The driver said he was travelling at 10-15 mph with only sidelights, due to the blackout. He suddenly saw two cycles; they carried red and white reflectors, but had no light on. The first thing he'd seen was the strap of a gas mask. The policemen admitted they did not have lights on their bicycle but claimed the man was speeding. The driver was fined. 39 10 13c

The Isle of Ely Surveyor said there was no need to sack roadmen as the work was vital and a number were digging trenches at schools. Happy Evacuees.—A suggestion, made during a short discussion concerning evacuation, that there should be a re-shuffling of evacuees around Cambs. villages, drew a spirited protest from mem¬bers at a meeting of the Cambs. Education Committee on Tuesday afternoon. The Chairman (Ald. E. G. G. Frost) stated that the number of evacuated children of: school age attending public elementary schools was 4,289, made up of 2,713 in school parties and 1,679 others. Three hundred and sixty-six secondary school children had been evacuated. Ald. Frost said he had been out to several of the schools with the Education Officer, and on his own to other schools in the county. "I would | like to say that what has struck me more than anything else has been the extraordinary good feeling there is on the whole between evacuated teachers and our own teachers. I was also struck with: the happiness of the evacuees," added the Chairman. # c.45.7

A Refugee Story.—A Polish refugee, a corporal in the Czech Army, arrived at Huntingdon North Railway Station on Friday, but as he could not speak English, the officials were unable to help him in his travels. The help of the police was sought, and at the station, Supt. E. Afford, with a Press representative, attempted by signs to make the corporal under¬stand, and found that he wanted to go to Baldock. It was too late for a train, so Sergeant Fardham found him lodgings for the night, and the next morning he was safely on his journey. The next day a Czech refugee called at the station with a piece of paper, on which was written, "I thank all Polish men and Mr. Inspector."

New Catholic Chapel.—The small chapel erected on the corner of the site in High Street, Old Chesterton, purchased by the Roman Catholic Church, was inaugurated on Sunday. Mgr. Canon Marshall (Rector of the Church of Our Lady and the English Martyrs) blessed the chapel, and Mass was celebrated by Father Watkis. The chapel is a corrugated iron structure, but its lines are good, and the interior fittings and decoration are in excellent taste. Canon Marshall announced that the Bishop of the Diocese wished their new chapel to be put under the patronage of St. Laurence, the great martyr of the Roman Church in the 3rd century, a saint to whom the con¬version of Rome from paganism to Christianity was largely attributed by the fathers of the church. # c.83

A Pathetic Note.—There is a pathetic side (writes Watchman) to some of the stories concerning small evacuees, and here is one sent by a Cambridgeshire billeting officer. A small child billeted with a "very respectable family" saw the husband preparing to go out one evening, so she said rather pathetically, "I know where you are going. You are going on the booze." Somewhat anxiously she watched for his return. Her anxiety was understood when she said to him, "I wish you were my daddy. When my daddy goes out on the booze, he throws cups at my mummy when he comes home."

Funeral of Peter and David Leggett.—A large number of sympathisers and friends attended the funeral at the Parish Church (Over) on Friday of Peter James Leggett (11) and David John: Leggett (9), sons of Mr. and Mrs. James Leggett, of High Street, who died last week from diphtheria. The two boys were popular in the village. They were members of the Church Sunday School and Guild and also of the church choir to which they had belonged for the past three years and had the distinction of having the best attendance records of all the choir boys.

Farm workers pay was raised by 2/- week. This was not a living wage but in the last war fathers and mothers brought up families of 10 and 12 children, all well and working, on a farm worker's wage. At Warboys a man and his wife, both over 80, were living in a tumbled-down cottage. He had brought up 19 children on an agricultural wage and every one of them was alive and well. Ouse Flood Water. — In spite of the serious flooding which has occurred in the Midlands, where the Ouse and Grand Union Canal have overflowed their banks, there appears little danger that the Cambridgeshire Fens will be greatly affected. Mr. Oscar Borer, Chief Engineer to the Great Ouse Catchment Board, said that although the level of the water at Newport Pagnell is 7ft above normal, the flood waters of the Ouse have not reached Bedford, and they should be dispersed before they can get down to the Fens. Cambridge is a much more cheerful place in the black-out today than it was when the war started. Then cyclists and pedestrians were few and it felt like a dead city. Now with theatres and cinemas going strong there is plenty of life and the whole atmosphere has changed. But with more traffic comes more danger. Some motorists and cyclists go too fast in the darkened streets. But the worst offenders are pedestrians dawdling in the roadway without any thought for the poor people awheel who with dim lights have to threat their way through the streets. 39 11 04

Sir – may I draw attention to the wanton destruction of air raid shelters in Histon? For many Sundays a band of volunteers have worked to construct shelters for the public and school children in case of emergency. But elder children delight in removing the sandbags. Now almost the complete side has been taken from the shelter at School Hill and spread about. May I appeal to the special constables who seen to be rather efficient in some other instances – G. The first part of the new scheme for improving the Central library is complete. In the new lending department book shelves radiate from a central staff inclosure, providing more room and improved natural lighting. The old lending library will become the newspaper reading room while the old reference room will be used for magazines. An innovation is the transfer of the Reference room upstairs to the old Education offices, entrance to which is gained through Peas Hill. Refugees, evacuees and any person resident in Cambridge are eligible as borrowers. 39 11 10

King Congratulates Airman. —Squadron Leader Philip R. Bar-well, with his squadron, drove off an attack by 12 enemy bombers on a convoy in the North Sea. He brought down the first of the raiders and altogether his squad¬ron accounted for seven. On November 2 he was personally congratulated by the King when he presented his squadron to His Majesty. Squadron Leader Barwell is the eldest son of Mr. Reginald Harwell, founder of Barwell's Tyre Renewing Co, Swave¬sey, Cambridge and King's Lynn.

Golden Wedding.—Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Pettit celebrated their 50th anniversary of their wedding on Tuesday. Both were born in Longstowe, and their marriage took place at the Parish Church. They have 11 sons and daughters, 31 grandchildren and one great grandchild, and they hoped that all would have met to celebrate the notable event, but several of the boys, who are serving with the King's forces, were unavoidably absent. The rest spent a happy day with the old couple, and the absent boys were not forgotten as a piece of wedding cake was sent to each of them. Both Mr. Pettit, who is employed on Capt. Briscoe's farms, and Mrs. Pettit are in the enjoyment of good health. Theirs was the first golden wedding to have been celebrated at Longstowe, at any rate, for many years.

New Mayor. — Counc. W. J Wing, was at yesterday's meeting of the Cambridge Town Council elected Mayor of the Borough. He was first elected as a member of the Council as a representative for Castle Ward in November 1930, and has done useful service on several committees. He has been Chairman of the Library Committee during the past three years. His brother (Aid. H. T. Wing) was Mayor in 1935-36.

Late Raspberries. — On Friday Mrs. Norman Haddow, of Over Road, Willingham, picked a 41b chip of raspberries from her garden.

Roadman Injured.—Mr. George Hepher, of Swavesey, when walking along the main road through the village, accompanied by two other men, about 7.30 p.m. on Wednesday, was knocked down near the junction of Ramper Road by a bicycle ridden by Mr. Douglas Canham. A lorry, it is said, was passing at the time. Mr. Hepher, who appeared to have sustained somewhat serious head injuries, was taken to Dr. Fetter's surgery close by, and after receiving attention, was taken to Addenbrooke's Hospital, where he was detained. On inquiry at the hospital yesterday, it was stated that Mr. Hepher's face was badly lacerated, but that he was comfortable.

The changes at the Central Library are working well with at least 200 books dealt with in the first half hour. There was a long queue of borrowers with half-a-dozen assistants in the centre issuing books as hard as they could go. From the point of view of light and supervision the new Lending Library will be very much better than the old. In the new magazine room – the old reference room and Librarian's office rolled into one – the mural decoration was tasteful. The new Reading Room opens in a week or so. The new Reference room upstairs have been open for some time and a good many townspeople have found their way up there 39 11 11b

Not Forgotten.—Notwithstanding the anxieties lot the present time, the sacrifices; made by our men and women, too, during the fateful years 1914-18 have not been forgotten in Cambridgeshire. An Old Servant of St. Ives. — When Mr. George Denis Day retires from the position of Town Clerk of St. Ives in February, he will have completed 50 years in that office. He succeeded his father in 1890. Mr. Day was born in St. Ives in 1860, and. entered his father's business after being educated at Amersham Hall School, Reading, and St. John's College, Cambridge. He was admitted a solicitor in 1885. Since then he has proved himself a veritable Trojan for public work. He has served as Clerk to the St. Ives Board of Guardians—a body served in a similar capacity by his grandfather 102 years ago —and to the St. Ives and Swavesey Rural District Councils. Three years ago he handed over the St. Ives R.D.C. clerkship to his son, Mr. Lewis Day, after 53 years in office. He was Clerk to the Hurstingstone Division of Hunts. (St. Ives) Justices for about 30 years until 1925, when Mr. Lewis Day took over. He was also Clerk to the old St. Ives Borough Justices. Among the other appointments he has held are the Clerkship to the St. Ives Assessment Committee and Supt. Registrar, the latter now being held by Mr. Lewis Day. Mr. Day has also acted on two occasions as Under-Sheriff. He is a Past President of the Hunts. Agricultural Society.

Former Councillor.—The death occurred on Sunday at his home, 220, Milton Road, of Mr. Horace George Gray, who was, until his retirement last year, managing director of Messrs. H. J. Gray and Sons Ltd., the sports goods manu¬facturers, of Benson Street, Cam¬bridge. He was 23 years of age and had been ill for only a short time. Mr. Gray was a son of the founder of the firm and entered the business when quite young. The early premises were off Grange Road, and later the firm had a factory in Searle Street before moving to Benson Street. Apart from his business life, Mr. Gray took a keen interest in town government and social and philan¬thropic matters. He was a member of the now defunct Chesterton Urban District Council and served for many years on the Cambridge Town Council. He was elected to the Town Council in March, 1912, being one of the first three representatives of East Chesterton on its inclusion in the Borough. He remained a member until 1927. For a long period he was appointed by Quarter Sessions as visitor to Bedford Gaol, and he was also an Income Tax Commissioner. He was made a J.P. for the County in 1930. # c.27

People think that war is good for newspapers because of increased sales, when every day brings fresh sensations, success or disaster on land, sea or the air. But it brings a crop of trouble: rising price of newsprint and the blackout adding to difficulties of distribution. Censorship was not to conceal the truth from the public but to prevent information getting into the hands of the enemy. Local news had to be sent to London to be censored but foreign stories arrived at the CDN over a private wire ready for publication. They were able to give later news than the London evening papers as they had to come on the afternoon train which often took two hours. There was terrible unemployment amongst journalists over 30. They were a reserved occupation and could not enrol in any of the services 39 11 22a

During a very dry summer wells in Kennett run dry and people have to get water from their more fortunate neighbours. In the event of a fire a hose attached to an ordinary household pump would run the well dry in a very few minutes. At Kennett End there is a builder's yard containing a large amount of timber with houses and a petrol pump close by. If fire broker out it would be difficult to deal with, villages said. One of Charlie Everett's proudest possessions was a chair in which the late King Edward once sat. Originally it was in a cottage on the Madingley Hall estate and one day the Prince of Wales, when an undergraduate, sought shelter from a thunderstorm. After a while the woman who lived there, who did not know who he was, offered him an old umbrella, remarking "You can have this one; I wouldn't lend my best one, not to the King of England". A day or two later it was returned with a sovereign and a note of thanks signed 'The Future King of England'. Mr Everett married the woman and the chair always had a place of honour. Born at Duxford, he travelled the country with Joseph Arch, speaking on behalf of the Labourers' Union. He started work for the Corporation as pindar thirty years ago. Regularly during the months when the commons were open for grazing he would get up at sunrise to start his work. 39 11 24

Appointment for Mgr. Marshall. Monsignor Canon J. B. Marshall, Rector of the Church of Our Lady and the English Martyrs, has been appointed Vicar Capitular of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Northampton, consequent upon the sudden death of the Bishop of Northampton (Rt. Rev. Laurance Youens). As Vicar Capitular, Mgr. Marshall will have charge of the administration of affairs of the diocese, including the granting of commissions and faculties until the appointment of a new Bishop. Mgr. Marshall last Friday attended the solemn Requiem Mass at Northampton Cathedral for the repose of the soul of Bishop Youens, and was one of the deacons at the throne, at which Cardinal Kinsley presided.

Bishop of Ely Offers Palace. As a gesture to indicate that the Church does not belong to the privileged classes alone, the Bishop of Ely (the Rt. Rev. Dr. B. O. F. Heywood) offered at the Ely Diocesan Conference at Cambridge on Tuesday to give up £1,000 a year at least and leave the Palace permanently for a six or eight-roomed house, using the surplus income to advance the Kingdom of God. The urgent need of maintaining moral welfare work in war-time was also com¬mented on by the Bishop in his address to the conference, which was held at the University Arms Hotel (Cambridge). He expressed dismay at the indirect inducement to sin which seemed to be offered—in some places, at least— to members of His Majesty's Forces 39 11 24

As the result of the accident windows of three coaches and the guard's van were smashed and several people were treated for shock and minor injuries. The only real casualty was a sailor returning home on leave. His name is Cook, and he was removed to a hospital, where he was detained. Passengers were .alighting from the Hunstanton to Liverpool Street express when the whole train was shaken by a terrific impact. Station officials and passengers ran to the rear of the train and found a light engine embedded in the guard's van. Driver G. W. Bailey, of Cambridge, was uninjured. Something should be done about the housing of old people: the number of old people is growing out of all proportion to the number of children and people of working age, Cambridge Women's Luncheon Club was told. In the old days people with nobody to look after them had to go to an institution. Now most live with relations but are not wanted, cause overcrowding, are treated as unpaid nurses and servants and appreciated very little. Some live in attic rooms in other people's houses with no water or cooking arrangements. It would be better to convert middle-class houses for them where they could form some sort of community. 38 11 28b # c.32.9

Some classrooms in Trumpington and St Paul's schools were 'dark pits' because of first-aid depots being placed in schools. There was a great danger of sandbags making the rooms damp and as classrooms were being used for people to sleep in all night it was difficult to get them aired, councillors were told. It was also alarming to see enormous laundry vans standing in narrow playgrounds which have to be manoeuvred when the children were about. But at Cherry Hinton there was nowhere else they could go. However three halls there were being used by children now. If they were not fit for first-aid posts, they were not fit to teach children in, Mrs Rackham said. 39 11 29c # c.45.7

Despite the provision of loudspeakers the uproar made it impossible for the Press to hear the speeches. The idea had come into his head while working in a Basque children's camp when he noticed that many of them had a king of fit at the sound of an aeroplane. "I do not care if they are Catholics or Hindus but they should not be moved at public expense", one said. Now they were being removed simply because the Roman Catholics wanted them to be under their supervision. They had previously agreed to take another 80 children; 40 were due to arrive at both Sawston and Whittlesford, but none came. At Bassingbourn only six out of 27 had arrived. Rooms had been gone ready and people ought not to be put about like that. They had begged and worried people into taking them and they didn't turn up. 39 12 01f & g

1789 Model. — A valuation by Chesterton Rural District Council of fire-fighting equipment provided by Parish Councils, mentioned that Over possessed an obsolete Merryweather manual fire engine of the year 1789. Together with three lengths of unserviceable hose and 11 buckets, it was valued at £7.10s. This information was included in a report which was before the Rural District Council at a meeting in the old County Hall, Hobson Street, Cambridge, on Tuesday. Willingham's fire-fight¬ing equipment, consisting of an 1827 fire-engine, a trailer tank, six 60ft. lengths of 2-inch delivery hose, 20 galvanised buckets, two small ladders, two standpipes and turnkeys, and two drags, was valued at rather more — £14. Caxton equipment, valued by Messrs. Merryweather at £40 3s 3d was valued by the Council's surveyor at £27. Cottenham's valued .by the Parish Council at £53 7s, was the engineer suggested, worth £37. Waterbeach Parish Council valued their equipment at £48.17s 9d, but the engineer placed the value on it at £29. Other parishes' equipment was valued as follows, Horningsea £3, Oakington £2 and Swavesey £6. # c.34.75

£2,000 Topped.—Cambridge has again exceeded expectations in its support of Poppy Day. It was thought that war-time conditions and the restrictions they brought with them would prevent this year's total from exceeding £1,500, but to the efficient organisation of the collection by undergraduates and the generous support of the townspeople, this sum has now been exceeded by £800. The grand total is now £2,328 14s, and it is estimated that there is still £50 to come in. The exceptional circumstances last year produced a sum of about £2,819, but the 1939 total is already near the £2,382 collected in 1937 and the £2,452 collected in 1936. All will agree that to collect such a sum under present conditions is a fine achieve¬ment on the part of the organ¬ising secretaries, R. N. Jones (St. John's) and R. Finn (Emmanuel) and their helpers. Pembroke heads the list of individual college coll¬ections with a sum of £223 - £80 more than the runner-up, Christ's. # c.36.95

Married 60 years,—A reporter, who called at 119, Oxford Road, (Cambridge) on Monday to congratulate Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Covill on the completion of 60 years of married life, found two staunch believers in the old-fashioned way of country life. Although they have lived in Cambridge for 27 years and gas is laid on in the house, they still use oil lamps for lighting and have no use for the wireless. A glass of parsnip wine with which to drink their health completed the illusion of being in a country cottage miles away from overhead cables, blaring load speakers and other blessings of this modern age. Mr. and Mrs. Covill were both born at Lode, and were married there in the parish church on December 4, 1879. They are now 83 and 82 years of age respectively and enjoy excellent health. Mr. Covill has not missed a month in the harvest field for 76 consecutive years. "I started when I was seven, and have done every job on the farm," he said. "Since I came to Cambridge 27 years ago. I have taken a month off from gardening to go to my son-in-law's farm at Hempstead. I went this year and worked on the stack unloading. There are not many who have done more work than I have. I fed 60 pigs this harvest". "I should think he's finished with Work now", interposed Mrs. Covill, but her hus¬band disagreed, and Mrs. Covill remarked "I wonder what they call it when you have been married 70 year's!" Before coming to Cambridge Mr. Covill farmed at Anglesey Abbey Farm, Lode, Horseheath and Little Cornard. In Cambridge, he was for 18 years gardener to the late Professor Nuttall in Madingley Road. Longevity runs in the family. His mother died at the age of 88, having been married when she was 17, and his father lived to be 86. A brother was 82 when he passed away. Both have been life-long .attendants at the Methodist Church, and still attend the Castle Street Church. A family party was held at their home on Monday after¬noon to celebrate: the anniversary. Mr. and Mrs. Covill have two sons and a daughter.

Later he ministered in Glasgow and Edinburgh, and then came back to Cambridge some years ago as Professor of New Testament Language and Literature at Westminster College. Death of Well-known Inhabitant. —Mr. George Jude, a well-known St. Ives garage proprietor, died at his home on Sunday, aged 84 years. It was in 1880 that he came to the town from Bury St. Edmunds, and after being employed for a time by Messrs. Fowell he set up in business on his own account about 40 years ago. A staunch Methodist, he attended the East Street Methodist Church, and he remembered the time when the Methodists used to meet in the building on the Quay now used as the Masonic Club. A widower, he leaves one son and one daughter.

Council Changes its Mind.—The recommendation of the General Purposes Committee that employ¬ees of the Cambridge Town Coun¬cil undertaking war service should have their war pay made up, subject to certain conditions for food and clothing, again provoked con¬siderable discussion at yesterday's meeting of the Town Council. When it came to a division, an amendment to refer the com¬mittee's report and recommenda¬tion back was lost by 24 votes to 20. The committee's report was then adopted except that the deductions for food and clothing were increased to 14s. for the indoor staff and teachers and 7s. for the outdoor staff. It was also agreed that the whole question should be reviewed in a year's time.

Black-out Deaths. — Two Cambridge women have died as a result of accidents which occurred in the black-out at Cambridge on Wednesday. In one case, where the woman was killed almost instantly, the accident occurred in the Trumpington road, near the Evelyn Nursing Home. Miss Mabel Timms, who was in service in Storey's Way, Cambridge, was struck by a lorry owned by Dickerson Ltd. and driven by William Douglas Weekley, of 65 Humberstone Road. The other accident occurred at the junction of Histon Road and Gil¬bert Road. Mrs. Maria Elizabeth Smith, of Pepys Road, Girton, was knocked down by a bus while walking. After the accident she had to be freed from beneath the vehicle. She was taken to Addenbrooke's Hospital in the police ambulance suffering from severe injuries, to which she succumbed # c.45.7

The new concrete reservoir on Lime Kiln Hill has been built partly below ground and covered with earth which will be sewed with grass seed, adding a pleasant green mound to the skyline. To guard against an interruption in supply due to a breakdown of pumping machinery or the bursting of trunk mains, the Water Company now had duplicate plan together with a reserve of four million gallons – nearly two days' supply – in its three reservoirs. 39 12 16

Police are dragging the river for two local cyclists who disappeared during the black-out after they had set out to cycle to their homes. Following a report that what appeared to be two cycles had been seen lying on the bed of the river near Dant's Bridge police commenced dragging and recovered a lady's machine. Later a man's cycle was brought to the surface. They have been identified as belonging to the missing couple. The man could swim but had a disabled leg due to a football injury. Mr W. King's latest films represent a remarkable advance on his past achievements. Apart from films of a domestic nature, such as the visit of Rotarians to Hemingford Grey and their outing to Houghton, there was one of the proclamation of Reach Fair. He visited this year to make a pictorial record but was unlucky in that the fair itself failed to materialise apart from a few side shows. He was able to catch the atmosphere of the opening ceremony and the children scrambling for new pennies. He also filmed the lunch in the village schoolroom, obtaining some candid shots. This might find its way into the archives if the fair suffers the same fate as Stourbridge Fair. The best of his colour films depicted a visit to Messrs Engelmann's nurseries at Saffron Walden showing glasshouses filled with carnations. 39 12 20 # c.65.6 # c.27.31

Ely Council Surveyor reported that a number of cracks and bulges had appeared on the south-east side of the old water reservoir. There was no doubt the damage had been caused by lightning. The settlement of the new tank had nothing to do with it. The tank was drained of 990 tons of water and when it was filled another pier started to crack, so it was immediately drained again. One of the Cambridge University and Town Gas Light Company's coke lorries has just been fitted with a gas container to enable it to run without petrol. Late Mr William F. Taylor.—The funeral took place at Linton on December 13 of Mr. William F. Taylor, who died suddenly in Addenbrooke's Hospital. The eldest son of the late Mr. William Farrow Taylor (founder of the "Cambridge Daily News"), Mr. Taylor was well known in Linton and district, having been captain of the Linton Cricket Club and a member of the committee of the Linton Granta Football Club. The funeral service was held in St. Mary's Church, Linton.

Long Service at Sawston.—An interesting record of long service reaches me (writes Watchman) from a correspondent who, very rightly, considers it should receive a measure of publicity. It concerns Mrs. Matilda Coe, of 11 High Street, Sawston. Mrs. Coe, my correspondent tells me, began work at Sawston Paper Mills in 1881 at the age of 14, and remained in continuous employment there for nearly 59 years, retiring last month. Her mode of travel to and from the works was walking, and it is estimated that she thus covered a total distance of over 55,000 miles on "Shanks' pony." Mrs. Coe, I am glad to hear, is still hale and hearty, and looks good for a long, active spell. I wish her a merry Christmas and a happy retirement.

He gained early pro¬motion to Leading Boy soon after his arrival, and later to Boy Petty Officer.

For two years a small community of Basque children have been our guests. Cambridge has become familiar with the little black-eyed, black-haired boys and girls and has enjoyed watching them dance and sing. They arrived under tragic circumstances, racked and nervous; the peace and quiet of the country village of Pampisford, redeemed and restored them. Now they have been adopted into English homes until they can return in safety to their own beloved land of Spain. Now a booklet has been published about their experiences 39 12 23 # c.45.7

Daguerreotype photographs were expensive and it was not until 1851 that a cheaper process came along. This was the collodion positive invented by Mr F. Scott Archer of Bishop's Stortford who died in 1857. These were framed portraits on glass and they were made in thousands at feasts in Cambridgeshire villages and on the beach at the seaside. One of the most notable makers was a Cambridge man called Dick Hutchinson who lived somewhere on the East Road and worked Yarmouth beach every summer. War could not 'black-out' the Christmas Eve Festival of nine lessons and carols at King's. From the crowded chapel the message of peace and goodwill travelled by wireless across Europe to France, Italy and Switzerland. The candles flickered even after black-out for a test showed no dangerous amount of light could be seen from outside. But there were dark, blank spaces among the rich glory of the stained windows which told of the removal of some of the glass for safety's sake. 39 12 27a

Golden Wedding.—Mr. and Mrs. James Wilson, of 79, High Street, Chesterton, celebrated their golden wedding on Christmas Day.
Christmas was Different. Christmas, 1939, has meant more solemn thoughts than usual for many. In countless homes, the traditional joy and gaiety has been tempered by absence of one or more members of the family. And yet, in spite of gaps at the dinner table, and because the advice to carry on as usual is so obviously sound, there has been little outward change in the character of the Christmas festival. In Cambridge, as elsewhere, people remembered their absent ones, but through the inspiring co-operation of the radio, were able to satisfy themselves that the men in the Services were not forgotten. At home, it was the usual day of gifts—the children's day—and for many the delight lay in entertaining little evacuees whose parents were unable to do the job themselves. The change in the times was reflected, perhaps, in the opening of some cinemas on Christmas day, but found themselves comparatively few patrons; it was still a home festival for most. The Town club had their usual football fixture in the morning, but this had to be scratched. On Boxing Day their fixture with

Rushden resulted in a decisive win for Cambridge. Another regular feature was the appearance of the Christmas Day bathers, who found not thick ice, but a deep fog to greet them. 39 12 29 # c.45.7

Party. A section of Popham Road, Tottenham, evacuated school held a successful children's Christmas party in the Church schoolroom (Cottenham). The party opened with community singing, followed by some exciting games. Meanwhile the tables had been gaily decorated by a willing band of helpers, and amidst great hilarity, the children donned paper hats, pulled crackers, and sat down to a sumptuous tea prepared by Mr. J. Sherrer. After tea, all eyes were turned towards the giant Christmas tree, laden with presents, distributed later by a youthful Father Christmas Died Soon After Diamond Wedding. Two months after he had celebrated his diamond wedding, Mr. William Smith, of The Mount, Mill-lane, Ashdon-road, Saffron Walden, died on Friday morning at the age of 86. He had been ill for about a year and had recently been much worse. Born at Hinxton, Mr. Smith's first job was as apprentice to a Sawston butcher, and he then branched out on his own with a shop at Duxford. He went to London, and although he came to Elmdon after his marriage, he returned to town after two years in the country. He spent the greater part of his life as representative of R. White and Sons, a mineral water firm. Mr. Smith moved to Linton, travelling from London at week-ends, and here he and his wife spent 14 years before coming to Saffron Walden in 1918. Retiring 10 years ago, Mr. Smith lived in Ashdon-road, and it was there that he and his wife celebrated their golden wedding. They moved to The Mount with their eldest daughter, Mrs. Backler, about three years ago. Their diamond wedding took place last October. Mr. Smith leaves a widow, one son and two daughters. He was one of the oldest members of the Hearts of Oak Society, which he joined in 1873, and was a member of the Saffron Walden. Conservative Club for many years.

Long Service on Town Council. Many in Cambridge heard with regret of the death of Councillor William Henry Swift, which occurred suddenly at Cambridge last week at his home at 34 Halifax Road. He was 73 years of age. A familiar figure in Cambridge, where he had lived since he started his career at the University Press, Mr. Smith had given close on 20 years' unbroken and faithful service to the Cambridge Town Council. It was in 1920 that he was first returned to the Council as the representative of West Chesterton, where he had lived since coming to Cambridge, and when the redistribution of seats took place in 1935, he was again elected as one of the three members for Castle Ward. And until the last he attended meetings of the Council and the meetings on which he served. Born in the vicinity of Harrogate in 1866, Mr. Swift came to Cambridge at an early age, when he started work at the Cambridge University Press. Over 50 years later, in May, 1931, he retired from the post as head of the Reading Department. In the course of his service there he saw the building double and treble its size, and watched its marvellous modern developments added as time went on. 40 01 05

Fine Record of Public Work. Newmarket has lost one of its most prominent residents by the death of Major Osmond Edward Griffiths, aged 73 years, of Park Gate, Park Lane, Newmarket. In his capacity as auctioneer and estate agent he was widely known throughout the Eastern Counties. He was also auctioneer to the Jockey Club and a member of Tattersall's Com¬mittee. He devoted many years of considerable energy to public work. The longest serving member of the West Suffolk County Council, he was elected in 1904 and became an alderman in 1926. He had served on the Newmarket U.D.C. since April, 1898. In 1904 he was elected Vice-Chairman and was Chairman for a period of three years from 1905. He was again Vice-Chairman in 1911 and 1912 but declined to accept, the chair in 1913. He was a magistrate for about 30 years.

Cambridge's Debt of Two Millions. Further substantial increases in the net loan debt of the Borough of Cambridge, and also in the rateable value of the Borough are the outstanding items revealed in the Abstract of Accounts for the year ending March 31, 1939, which has just been issued by the Borough Treasurer (Mr. A. G. Emburey). He points out that in the year under review there was a net increase in the loan debt of £216,892, bringing the total net debt to £2,085,000—the first time that the two million mark has been topped. Of that amount— which represents nearly £30 per head of the population—it is interesting to note that £1,159,925 is in respect of housing

Thaw Stops Dustcart. Notices throughout the village (Melbourn) announced that if the weather was favourable and the ground hard on Monday, the dustcart would make its half-yearly collection of household refuse on that day. Unfortunately for householders, however, a thaw set in on Sunday, followed by heavy rain, which made the road to the old chalk pits, where the rubbish was to be deposited, impassable, and the visit had to be postponed. It will be a great disappointment to the many villagers who had collected and deposited hundreds of empty tins, etc beside their cottage doors ready for removal.

Creation of a Song.—Many of my readers (writes Watchman) will, I hope, have enjoyed the successful pantomime, "Cinderella" at the Cambridge Arts Theatre, and will consequently find this note of interest to them. A few days ago, I was chatting to my talented friend, Raymond Bennett, the Cambridge-born comedian, who is playing '.'Buttons" in the show, and who is now well-known in Lon¬don and the Eastern Counties. Ray claims to have been the first to use the new popular chorus song "The Chestnut Tree" which he is singing at the Arts, and this is how it came about. "Many years ago," he told me, "whilst I was here in Cambridge, I was going down to the Cam Sailing Club grounds at Clayhithe, and on the way I passed a school where the children were doing an action song. I watched them for a time, and it struck me that here was something that could be used as a good chorus song. And I memorised enough to enable me to sing it with success for a good many years." Continuing his story, Ray revealed that his song from Cam¬bridgeshire was responsible for an interesting sequel. "A few years ago," he went on, "I was playing in a concert party at Southwold, and, of course, I introduced my 'Chestnut Tree.' Whilst there, a man came and asked me about it, and the next thing I knew was that it was being used as a camp song by the boys at the Duke of York's camp there. As you probably know, the newsreels filmed the King doing it there with the boys, and eventually somebody produced the current version. And so was born a popular num¬ber known to all ballroom and music hall habitués. # c.76

Cambs. Sailor Hero. The inhabitants of the little Cambs. village of West Wickham look like preparing a big welcome for their sailor hero, Sam Brown, when he returns home in a few days. On Thursday Sam Brown became the hero of the 1,700-ton London steamer Keynes, which was attacked and sunk by Nazi bombers in the North Sea. Firing the ship's only machine-gun, Brown staved off the first attack and, to quote him, "I saw several hits, and I think the airmen were rather worried by my fire, and the plane eventually made off." Later Sam Brown had a man to man engagement with a second and larger bomber. Sam Brown is a single man of 41. He joined the Navy as a boy of 13, and served in the Great War. He was a gunner of a battle cruiser which took part in the battle of the Falkland Isles. After the war he continued to serve as an A.B. and completed 24 years' service before retiring on a pension in February of 1936. Returning to civilian life, Brown obtained a job on an aerodrome, and was thus employed until he was called up at the outbreak of the present conflict. His mother and father are both dead, and in civilian life Brown lived at home with his unmarried sister, Miss Doris Brown, who looks after the home. Brown, who lost an elder brother in the Great War while serving in the Suffolks, is one of a family of 13. Miss Brown said that her .brother had wired her that he was safe and that all the crew were saved. "He did not mention any part he took in the encounter, but we are proud of him." A younger brother said "Good old brother. We'll have a celebration when he comes home —and what a celebration!"

Death of former Dean of Ely. — Dr. Alexander Francis Kirkpatrick died at Bournemouth on Monday at the advanced age of 90. He was Dean of Ely from 1906 to 1936 and Master of Selwyn College, Cambridge, from 1898 to 1907. Born at Lewes and educated at Haileybury and Trinity College, Cambridge, Dr. Kirkpatrick became a Fellow of Trinity in 1871, Winning the Carus Greek Testament Prize in 1870, he was an assistant tutor of Trinity by 1871, and in that year sat for the theological examination, being placed in the first class. The examination was reconstituted as a Tripos two years later. Besides being placed in the first class, he was awarded all three prizes in that examination. He was ordained a deacon in 1874, and a priest in the following year by the then Bishop of Ely, Dr. Woodford. He became examining chaplain to the Bishop of Winchester in 1878, and later served Dr. Davidson in the same capacity. When he was 33 he became Regius Professor of Hebrew and Canon Residentiary of Ely, retaining the Chair till 1903, in which year he followed the newly-elected Master of Pembroke, Dr. Mason, in the Lady Margaret Professorship. When Bishop J. R. Selwyn died, Dr. Kirkpatrick succeeded him as Master of Selwyn. He left Cambridge in 1906 for the Deanery of Ely, and in Convocation he persistently supported those who worked for Prayer Book revision. In 1936, at the age of 86, failing-health forced him to resign his post at Ely, but he showed surprising vigour in his last years.

New Chairman.—Mr. Grafton D. Pryor was appointed Chairman of the Newmarket (Suffolk) Bench at a meeting of magistrates held on Tuesday morning. A member of a well-known Cambridge family, Mr. Pryor has practised as a barrister for many years, and in 1937 was appointed Recorder of Ipswich. He takes a prominent part in public life, being a member of the West Suffolk County Council and Newmarket Urban District Council, of which he has been Chairman.

Both vehicles were, however, able to proceed on their way, and neither of the drivers was injured

The War Agricultural Committee was concerned that valuable land in the fens which is two or three miles down an impossible road is lying derelict. Much is well-drained and would produce very good crops but is impossible of access at present. Internal Drainage Commissioners should construct roads good enough for individual fens so the produce can be got away. Coun Jeeps said that in Willingham there were 1,700 acres derelict because of the condition and nature of the roads. Improvements would increase the value of the land in Burwell Fen from £4 to £40 40 01 27c

Shortly after 2 am the premises of Mr W.P. Burges, clothier & outfitter of High Street Huntingdon were found to be on fire. The property stands in a fairly enclosed part of the High Street and on arrival the brigade found the rear of the premises to be well alight. They were hampered by severe weather conditions but a plentiful supply of water was available and they were able to prevent the blaze spreading to other buildings. There have been two other fires nearby within the last few years; one at the Mayor's grocery shop and the other at Mr Kirkham's establishment. Councillor Doggett was nominated as chief air raid warden to replace Lord Rothschild. The Government has said that Cambridge was considered a safe area and it was unnecessary to man posts. Wardens needed common sense and not to follow the letter of the law as laid down in the little green book. It was better to go to the nearest telephone immediately rather than wait to fill up the report form. Wardens wanted to do the right thing but were bothered by red tape and the thought of examinations. Mickey Mouse gas masks were now available for children aged 18months to four years – 40 02 01a,

Children in fenland schools should remain inside in the event of an air raid or escorted to trenches if these have been constructed. There is nothing to prevent parents from fetching children from school when an air raid warning has been given, though such action is deprecated. School shelters could be used, out of school hours, by the public as wardens would be on duty whether the schools were in session or not. Even if the school was in session when an alarm was given, the public who were in the street at the time could make use of shelters, March councillors were told. 40 02 02a

An RSPCC inspector said he saw two children at Adelaide School. They were dirty and when asked when they washed they said 'Never'. The boy had no soles to his boots and they were under-nourished and under-clothed. Their feet were covered with chilblains. He went to their home and found a fire in only one room. There were no carpets and no means of washing. There was insufficient bedding – only sacking being provided. A girl was lying in a bed wet with urine and was dressed in thin clothes. The father could not earn enough for food and clothing. They were taken to the Poor Law Union. 40 02 02c Night Blaze. Shortly after 2 a.m. on Tuesday the, premises of Mr. W.P. Burges, clothier and outfitter, of High Street, Huntingdon, were found to be on fire. The fire brigade was summoned immediately, and on arrival, found the rear of the premises to be well alight. The property stands in a fairly congested part of the High Street and access to the fire was a difficult matter for the brigade. It is presumed that a stove, which had recently been installed, set fire to a large wooden beam, which had been smouldering for some time, and was the cause of the outbreak. Mr. Burges, who does not live on the premises, was informed, and was soon on the spot. The brigade was hampered by the severe weather conditions, but a plentiful supply of water was available, and within a short time they were able to prevent the fire extending to surrounding properties. Apart from the damage done by the fire, many hundreds of pounds worth of clothing have been ruined by the water, and it is estimated that the total damage will reach several thousands of pounds.

Killed While Flying.—The Hon. Wm. Drogo Sturges Montagu, the younger son of the Earl of Sandwich, Lord Lieutenant of Huntingdonshire, was killed while flying on Friday. He was 32. The other occupant of the plane, Pilot Officer G. S. Taylor, was also killed. Mr. Montagu originally followed the career of the First Earl of Sandwich in the Royal Navy, but only left this service to take up aviation as a hobby. Simple but impressive was the service at St. Mary's Church, Brampton, on Tuesday afternoon, when the funeral took place. The Ven. Archdeacon Knowles, assisted by the Rector of Brampton (the Rev. W. A. Uthwatt) conducted the service, which was fully choral. The deceased officer was accorded military honours, the coffin, covered with the Union Jack being borne by six R.A.F. sergeants. Pilot officers acted as pall bearers, and others followed as it was carried from the church. Outside stood a large escort of airmen with reversed arms. After the service the body was taken to Cambridge for cremation, and later the ashes will be placed in the family vault at Brampton.

In Cambridgeshire there are thousands of acres of really good land which is standing idle; a quarter is actually derelict and the remainder growing hardly anything at all. Much money has been spent on its drainage and it has to bear high drainage rates. For six months in the year no loaded vehicle can get on or off the land. There are only soft roads. Until hard roads are made this exceptionally good land will never be able to grow the amount of food it ought. 40 02 08a & b

House Wall Collapses. When a Cambs. soldier due from France on leave returns to his home, he will find it looking as though it had been bombed; An end wall of the house, which is situated in Tunwell's Lane, Great Shelford, collapsed on Wednesday as if torn off by high explosive, leaving two rooms exposed to view. Fortunately no one was inside at the time, though had the occupant, Mr. Thomas Roslyn, arrived on leave as expected, he and his wife might both have been there. As it was, Mrs. Roslyn went to the house to air it, but when her husband did not turn up she went to her mother's home in Stonehall Road, Shelford. The collapse occurred about 8.30 p.m., and the house looked like a doll's house with the end off. The furniture in the two rooms visible was undisturbed; a wardrobe in the bedroom could be seen standing within a few inches of the place where the wall had been. 40 02 09

Mr. H.C. Francis. A well-known County Council alderman, Mr. Henry Clement Francis, of Burleigh House, Newmarket Road, Cambridge, died in a Cambridge nursing home on Wednesday after a short illness. He was born in Cambridge in 1857. In 1876 he left the country to farm in Australia, staying there, save for a period of leave, until 1896, when he returned to England. After a year's work on an estate as agent, he became a director of the Star Brewery, Cambridge. The firm's fine horses were an especial interest of his; he used to supervise their care and their purchase, with results of which material evidence was the awards they won at local shows. In local government matters, and in many other ways, he did much for the Abbey Ward, where his helpfulness will be especially missed. One of his acts was to present to the Abbey Football Club their Newmarket Road ground. Of this club he was President. His local government work began in 1902 when he was elected to the Board of Guardians for the Abbey Ward. He was chairman from 1924 to 1925. In 1907 he was elected to the County Council, becoming an alderman in 1931. He served on many committees.

There will be an allotment plot for every citizen who requires one and within a reasonable distance of his home, Old Chesterton Allotment Society was told. It was important to produce every possible ounce of food. George Newman compared the position with that in 1916 when he could not find an allotment. "May-Ladying" at Hildersham. In last week's "Passing Hour" (writes Watchman), Mr. Kidd, of Fen Drayton, gave some interesting extracts from a Histon school log book, one of which was: "1871, May 1st—It is the custom . . . for the girls to go May-ladying, i.e., they go to the principal houses carrying dolls and begging 'Please to 'stow a ha'penny on the poor old Maylady'. This event was common enough in many Cambridgeshire villages in bygone days but the village of Hildersham was looked upon as being the headquarters of the movement. Here the girls, encouraged and helped by the aristocracy in the village, produced one of the finest Mayladies to be seen in the county, parading with it through their own and neighbouring villages. The parade was at its best in early Victorian days, but began to fade out about 70 years ago. There are many old inhabitants now living who can recall the dolls dressed and paraded by the Hildersham girls. The annual Cambridgeshire event became notable, and may be found briefly described in Brand's "Popular Antiquities", published in 1911. # c.39

Parting Gift. The Rector (the Rev. C, G. Poynder), on behalf of many of the parishioners (of Boxworth), on Wednesday week presented Miss Beaumont with a parting gift in token of their esteem and appreciation of her 12 years' service as head teacher of the village school. In his remarks, Mr. Poynder spoke of the loss the parish would suffer at her departure, as she had been a most energetic, generous and loyal supporter of the church and institute. Miss Beaumont, in reply, spoke of the happy years she had spent at. Boxworth, but said she was obliged to resign because of ill-health. She thanked the donors for their present. The presentation took the form of a silver toilet set. 40 03 01

Nine candidates were presented, viz., five by the Rector of Girton and four by the Rector of Cottenham at the confirmation which was held in Girton Parish Church by Bishop Price on Thursday week. Tea was provided after the service for the candidates' and their friends in the Village Hall.

Isle of Ely County Council considered a scheme for providing feeding stations and shelters for people rendered homeless and destitute by the destruction of their homes by enemy action. Buildings have been earmarked and stocks of food, sufficient for 1,000 people for six days, have been stored at three institutions. Arrangements had been made for the opening of sick bays at Ely and Wisbech for the treatment of evacuated children suffering from non-infectious diseases. School air raid shelters and trenches were intended solely for the use of children. Although the public had free access out of school hours it was hoped they would not use them in school hours unless they were caught in a raid and some distance from home. 40 03 02a

An Inspector told the court he visited Appleby's Stores, Main Street, Littleport and bought some 'County Garden Cheese de Luxe'. This was enormously popular because of its palatability but when analysed was found to contain excessive water – it was in fact processed cheese with water. But the product had been labelled by the manufacturer and had since been withdrawn. The case against the shop was dismissed. – 40 03 02b, c

A London cheapjack was fined for selling chocolate at the Cattle Market as Fry's Chocolate when they had not been made by Fry's. This was serious, this sort of thing was going on through the Eastern Counties and they had to put a stop to it. The vendor said he'd sold them as 'Desire' chocolates but the label had mysteriously disappeared. – 40 03 02d

Huntingdonshire would receive another 4,400 evacuees if London was raided and they would be sent down within 36 hours whether accommodation was ready for them or not. It was a great injustice to farm labourers that they should have to put up with these women and children. One lady had said she would sooner go to prison than take any more. This good woman had three women with children billeted on her. The first had six and left taking several things, the second departed owing money and the third should have paid 15 shillings board but went home owing over £5. – 40 03 06a

Hostile aircraft dropped bombs on Ely causing ten casualties in Waterside where cottages were wrecked. Incendiaries set light to the old brewery and the road from Forehill was rendered impassable by bomb damage. Gas was also prevalent in the area. Later more bombs dropped causing a major fire at Harlock's maltings, the Ship public house was damaged and electricity cables in Little Lane destroyed. High explosives also caused casualties in Littleport where the bridge collapsed and repair squads were rushed to Black Horse Drove after the river bank was breached, causing flooding. Sacrifice for Finland. There can be few people (writes Watchman) who have made a greater sacrifice in this country for Finland's cause than Mr. R, E. Way, M.A., of Brinkley. Mr. Way has three farms at Burrough Green, Cambridgeshire, and keeps a number of thoroughbred mares at his Hall Stud there, and only recently he purchased a stallion named The Hour. Mr. Way was a familiar figure in the hunting field with the Newmarket and Thurlow Hounds, and his love for horses of all kinds is only equalled by his love for dogs; his large Irish wolfhound was usually to be seen with him when he was walking or riding round his land. Three years ago Mr Way started the Burgh herd of Aberdeen Angus cattle, which this year won several prizes at the agricultural shows. Keenly interested in all matters concerning the countryside, Mr Way was a member of the Newmarket Rural District Council and of various societies. Yet he willingly left all at a few hours' notice to go and join the British contingent of the International Volunteer Force which he regarded as a crusade. Previously he had been rejected for the British Army. Mr Way's employees have been watching the recent moves in the Finnish-Russian war with special interest and they are all hoping that the conclusion of hostilities will result in Mr Way's early return

A few minutes after coming off A.R.P. duty at the N.I.A.B. on Huntingdon Road, a University worker was knocked down by a car and killed. He had been a member of staff for some years and taken special interest in vegetables, making contacts across the country. He had many interests and had become an air raid warden, work he did with his characteristic energy and enthusiasm. The fact that he was killed just as he was going off duty as a warden adds further poignancy to the tragic manner in which he died. – 40 03 18a

Father of Council. The Cambridgeshire County Council has lost its oldest member, not only in age, but in the number of years of service, by the death of Dr. Joseph Watson Ellis, who passed away suddenly early on Sunday afternoon. He had not been well for some weeks, and latterly had been confined to bed. Born at Swavesey on June 10, 1853, the son of the late Dr. Robert Sage Ellis, he was educated at Epsom and Hurstpierpoint, and at St. Bartholomew's Hospital. On becoming qualified as a medical man, he was for a time house surgeon at the Huntingdon County Hospital until in January, 1877, he succeeded to the late Dr. Darnell's practice at Swavesey, and was also medical officer for the district. He retired from practice in May, 1927. At Swavesey, at one time or another during his long life, he held practically every public office including those of churchwarden, parish councillor, Gallon's Charity feoffee and school manager. In politics he was a strong Conservative, and was chairman of the local Association. He was greatly interested in all forms of sport. In his younger days he was a keen cricketer, and up to last summer rarely ever missed an important match at Fenner's. It was in 1891 that he was first elected to the County Council, defeating Mr. G. Long in the Electoral division. In 1895 Mr. Long turned the tables, but it was only for three years, and Dr. Ellis was again elected in 1898, since which time he has served without a break. He was elected an Alderman on March 18, 1922. During the long service Dr.

Ellis was a member of the following committees: — Local Government, Maternity and Child Welfare, Public Health, Roads and Bridges and Standing Joint.

Planners discussed a proposal for 36 houses, a builder's yard, six shops and a hotel or cinema at the junction of Coldham's Lane and Cherry Hinton High Street. Under development plans a site had been set apart for shops in another part of Cherry Hinton and they were not prepared to allow a hotel or cinema opposite the church; that land must be retained as a housing site at eight to the acre. There were a number of serious 'casualties' from a Bank Holiday 'air raid' on Cambridge. The realistic-looking 'wounds' of the 'injured' consisted only of grease-paint. High-explosive bombs on Jesus Green, Parker's Piece and Market Hill were supposed to have inflicted severe injuries. Experience gained from actual raids in Spain was made use of in determining the proportion of the various types of casualties. The sluice keeper at Denver had never seen the water go through as fast as it had this year. But the banks are much stronger now than at any time within the memory of living man, H.G. Martin told the Ouse Catchment Board. If no pumping station was installed at Upware it would be necessary to raise the banks of the lodes by five feet and taking the settlement into consideration the costs of maintenance would be £4,000 pa. The pumping station would cost £5,000 and the existing banks would be topped. Versatile Sportsman. Cambridge has lost one of its most versatile and best liked sportsmen by the death, which occurred on Monday in a nursing home, of Mr. Harry Coulson. He was 74 years of age and his home was at 16, Grantchester Road. The late Mr. Coulson was a native of Cambridge and in his early days was a baker and confectioner in Magdalene Street, and played for the Cassandra and Victoria Cricket Clubs. He went to Cheltenham College as a coach and after, two years there was coach at Bedford Grammar School for six years. He returned to Cambridge on being appointed groundsman at King's and Clare, a position he held for some 30 years. When he was appointed to the position the ground was on the site of the new University Library in Burrell's Walk, and during the time the ground was occupied by the 1st Eastern General Hospital, Mr. and Mrs. Coulson rendered valuable service by catering for the nurses. The present King's and Clare ground at Barton Road was laid out by Mr. Coulson. In his younger days he won fame as a cricketer when playing for Cambridgeshire. In a fortnight in 1909 he performed two remarkable bowling feats. Against Herts., at Hitchin, he took eight wickets for 13 runs, and then, at Newmarket, against Norfolk, he took eight wickets for only five runs. In commemoration of this accomplishment he was presented with a rose bowl. Mr. Coulson had many other sporting interests. He could make 80 and 90 breaks at billiards; he won the championship of the Cam; he skated in the amateur championship, and won trophies on the running track. He also used to breed poultry, and twice won championship cups at the Crystal Palace. Mr. and Mrs. Coulson celebrated their golden wedding in November, 1933. There are six daughters, all married. 40 03 29

Wages of horsekeepers, cowmen and shepherds will also increase. Farm Blaze. Prompt work by farmhands with pails of water and the speedy arrival of the Fire Brigade saved what would almost certainly have been a serious fire at Westfield Farm, Comberton, on Monday The outbreak occurred in a stockyard, where a quantity of straw and litter became ignited. A strong wind fanned the flames, but several employees and others threw pail after pail of water on them until the brigade arrived. With two deliveries from a pond nearby, the worst of the outbreak was soon quelled. Most of the fowls and pigs, which were kept in sheds in the yard, were removed to safety. The farm is owned by the Cambridgeshire County Council and tenanted by Mr. Eric Pryor.

College Master's Death. Mr. Arthur Gray, Master of Jesus College since 1912, died at the Lodge, there on Friday night at the age of 88. He was a former president of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society and had written books on the history of his college, of the university and of the town.

Eeling at Bottisham Locks. In a recent issue (March 22), writes Watchman, reference was made to a possible revival of a once important Fenland industry, namely eel fishing. A correspondent, who, about 70 years ago was born and reared within a mile of Bottisham Locks, once a famous place on the Cam for eels, is reminded of some interesting happenings and of' an eel pie business there. About a century ago, the keeper of the locks was old William Robinson, who lived in a little cottage opposite the sluice gates with his wife and daughter. And he was one of the most famous, eelers of his time, working not only on the Cam, but also along the lode that runs from Bottisham to the locks on the main stream. He rarely used an eel fork or spear for catching eels, preferring the "eel-set" (snare) or eel-buck (trap), a kind of wicker tunnel closed at one end. The old lock keeper caught more eels than he could comfortably dispose of alive, and this led to the making of two penny eel pies by his wife and daughter. On certain evenings the old fellow would go into Waterbeach village and at the Sun, Rose and Crown, Dog and Duck, Travellers' Rest, and other taverns marketed his wares. The fame of Robinson's eel pies, reached Cambridge, but before a branch business or "round" could be established in the town, the famous old eel catcher died and the business came to an end. According to my correspondent, who often discussed the eel trade with other eelers at the locks, the: female eel is "very tasty, very sweet" and far better than the male of the species, the male being smaller and tougher than the female. A Sister's Birthday. — A Melbourn correspondent writes: It is of course, not unusual for sisters to meet and celebrate a birthday, but an event in the village seems, to call for special mention. One of the inhabitants had her 79th birthday one day last week and she invited her two sisters to tea; one of them was 84 years of age and the other 77years. The; combined ages thus amounted to 240 years

Presentation. In making a presentation on Tuesday to Mr. F. Bunnett (former Chief Sanitary Inspector), on behalf of Chesterton Rural Council, Capt. R. S. Hicks said he would be glad for Mr. Bunnett to succeed him as representative of Great Wilbraham and become one of the council. Captain Hicks spoke highly of Mr. Bunnett's knowledge and common sense and prophesied that if Mr. Bunnett did join the council, it would not be long before he reached the chair. The presentation took the form of an illuminated address signed by members of the council, and it was given in recognition of Mr. Bunnett's 38 years' work as sanitary inspector, from which position he retired in September last.

New Evacuees. Tuesday's .meeting of the Chesterton Rural District Council, Mr. E. B. Newman, who is chief Billeting Officer, reported that the council had been asked to prepare to receive 2,000 additional evacuated schoolchildren if air raids developed. Of 10,000 leaflets sent to householders, 368 replies had been received, 60 of these from people unable or unwilling to receive evacuees. He suggested the council should press the Ministry of Health to reduce the number to the district to 1,500. On the proposition o-f Mrs. Bennett, who spoke highly of the way the people of Histon and Impington looked after the evacuees, the matter was referred to the committee, with a recommendation that the figure should not be more than 1,000.

Almost a departed glory.When the Mayor and Corporation of Cambridge visited Reach on Monday, it was found that the fair consisted of one sweet stall. Owing to the petrol restrictions, the Mayoral party was much smaller than usual, and the lunch in the village schoolroom was also cancelled. Apart from these differences, the procedure followed the usual lines. The Town Clerk (Mr. C. H. Kemp) read the proclamation at two places in the village and: new pennies were distributed in the villages en route. Several of the visitors made purchases at the "fair" and went up on to the bank before returning home. # c.27.31

Visit of the Duchess of Gloucester. The Duchess of Gloucester paid a private visit to Huntingdon on Friday, and inspected headquarters of the W.V.S., the Central workrooms, the Edwards Home for children and other places in the district. The Duchess appeared pleased with all she saw.

A Centuries-old ceremony. The ancient ceremony, known locally as "walking the causey" (causeway) was solemnly carried out (at Barrington) last Sunday. The ceremony, which is said to date from time immemorial, is closely allied to that known as "Beating the bounds." The Barrington beater, however, operates only upon the village green (an area of nearly 30 acres) and not around the parish boundary, as is customary in some places. Barrington's official "walker" is now Mr. Fred Patman, and a few minutes after ten o'clock on Sunday morning he appeared clad in a frock coat, gorgeous waistcoat and a silk "topper," carrying a sword, said to be Roman, and a monster bell, gagged this year because of wartime conditions and ARP conditions about bell-ringing. Starting from the south-western end of the green, he walked with stately stride along the old cobbled pathway across the green to the church, making "official" proclamations en route, and knocking at the door of an old thatched house, once the town hall, but now renovated and a private residence, his progress towards the church being witnessed by many villagers. Among the visiting spectators this year were Mr. Jubal Howard Howard, and Mr. P. R. Salmon, of Melbourn, students of local history and folklore 40 05 03 # c.39

King Charles II at Newmarket. - Mr. Donald Dale, of Chesterton Road, Cambridge, in a letter to Watchman, refers to King Charles II's association with Newmarket, stating: The racecourse at Newmarket was one of Charles II's favourite resorts. Horse racing, indeed, was the most popular pastime of the Court, or nearly so ... In one of his poems, my Lord of Rochester refers to "Dragon," "Darcy" and "Gee," and these names would appear to refer to racehorses, the training of which was a pastime of many noblemen and the King himself. In October, 1680, Samuel Pepys, Prince of Naval Administrators and Diarist, was with the Court at Newmarket, taking down in shorthand (Shelton's tachgraphy) from the King's own lips the story of his escape after the battle of Worcester. The manuscript in longhand, is now in the Pepysian Library at Magdalene College. "I cannot tell whether the Rowley Mile is named after the Merry Monarch's nickname (Old Rowley) . . ." he says.

Ely Theological College Principal.—The Rt. Rev. Bishop Walter J. Carey, D.D., Chaplain of Eastbourne College, has, I learn, accepted the Bishop of Ely's invitation to become Principal of Ely Theological College in succession to the late Canon C. J. Smith (writes Watchman). The new Principal will also be installed as a Canon of; the Cathedral. Dr. Carey returns to Ely, for in 1898 he was a student at the college. He also had a well varied career. An Oxford man, he was in charge of the Church of Ascension, Lavender Hill, London, and Librarian of Pusey House, Oxford, from 1908 to 1917. Two years later he was appointed warden to Lincoln Theological College, and in 1921 he was consecrated Bishop of Bloemfontein, South Africa. He retired in 1934, and later took up office as secretary of the S.P.G., later accepting the position as chaplain at Eastbourne. During the last war he was chaplain in the Navy

Driver Saves Train. The driver of the 5.31 p.m. passenger train from Cambridge to King's Cross averted a serious accident near the Long Road Bridge on Saturday, when some goods wagons became derailed across the passenger train's path. Rapidly applying his brakes, he brought the train to a standstill just as it touched one of the wagons. Its four leading wheels were derailed, but neither passengers nor train crew were hurt. The only injuries were those sustained by Driver Johnson and Fireman Layton, of the goods engine, which also became derailed. Johnson sustained a bruised shoulder and Layton burned his hands. The goods train, which was on a loop line adjacent to the main line and was travelling in the same direction as the passenger train, was derailed by a pair of safety points designed to prevent any train from the loop line entering the main line when the line has been signalled as clear and some dozen trucks came off the rails blocking both the up and down main lines. The front of the passenger train ploughed ten or 12ft. into one of the waggons before coming to rest. The goods engine fell on its side, and the driver and fireman scrambled clear # c.26.2

Enemy Aliens Rounded Up. A large number of male enemy aliens who come within the scope of the provisions of a new Home Office order were rounded up at Cambridge. In Cambridge the round-up was carried out by members of the Borough Police in plain clothes. The procedure adopted was for the police to go in cars to the homes of the men affected and ask them to go to the police station. From there they were taken to the Guildhall. Before being conveyed by bus to internment camps, they were allowed to go home, accompanied by the police, to collect clothes and other personal belongings. A number of University men, including Fellows of colleges, were among those dealt with. Four brothers and a man, who will be 60 in a fortnight, were other cases. In several instances, aliens who were out when police called, went voluntarily to the police station. # c.45.7

Roast Pork. Eleven fat pigs were roasted alive and 11 more were severely burnt that they had to be destroyed after fire had broken out in a piggery at Longstanton on Saturday night. Over 100 chicks were also destroyed. The sties were burnt to the ground. Two brooders - which are believed to have caused the fire - were similarly burnt out. The pigs were owned by Mr. Thomas Henry Hazel, a smallholder. Neighbours and police attempted to quell the outbreak by forming a bucket chain from nearby pumps to the scene of the blaze. Mr. Hazel opened the doors of the sties to let the pigs escape and when they were afterwards rounded up many were found to be too badly burned to live. The fire was first noticed about midnight by a railway signalman.

Retirement After 19 Years. — Mr. P. J. Squires has retired from the office of secretary of the Ruri-Decanal Conference of the Cambridge Deanery after 19 years' work. Mr. H. E. F. Pateman has been appointed his successor.

Pastor Dies.— The villages of Shepreth and Barrington have suffered a great loss by the death on the 16th inst, of the Rev. Henry Darlow, their Congregational pastor. Mr. Darlow conducted a meeting at the Shepreth church that evening and died shortly afterwards at his home. In spite of his advanced years — he was 78 — he had been remarkably active and every Sunday he used to walk from Shepreth to Barrington, where he had held the pastorate for the past 17 years. Mr. Darlow's influence for good in the village of Shepreth began with his appointment as headmaster of the school. He continued in this office for 29 years and during the period he won the affection of the young people of the village to such an extent that when 21 years ago, he took the oversight of the church, his ministry could scarcely have been other than a successful one. His devoted service was soon recognised by his fellow ministers and churchmen over a wide area, and he had been elected to the chair of the Cambs. Congregational Union. 40 05 24

Dunkirk Experiences. The village has accorded a warm welcome to Pte. Ernest Marshall, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Marshall, of Barton Road, Comberton, who returned home during this week for a few days' leave after a thrilling experience during the withdrawal of the troops from Dunkirk. Relating his experiences, Pte. Marshall said they were about five miles from Dunkirk when orders were received to make for the coast, and to take to the boats as they became available. Reaching the coast at daybreak, they waded in the water up to their armpits in a vain attempt to board a boat, but every boat was already filled to its utmost capacity. Still undismayed, although shells were bursting continuously around them, they decided to return to the shore, and make their way along the coast in the direction of Dunkirk. That five-mile journey Pte. Marshall described as one of living torture. Numerous bombers were hovering overhead, dropping their deadly bombs around them, and heavy shellfire added to their discomfort. By lying flat on the ground and snatching every effort to proceed during a brief lull in the attack, he and his comrades, after seven long hours, eventually reached Dunkirk, where they boarded a boat, which, in spite of heavy enemy attack, landed them safely in England. 40 06 14 # c.45.7

Twelve killed in big raids on England. 100 German bombers engaged. 12 civilians, including five children were killed and many others injured as Germany opened its direct war on Britain during the night with extensive raids over East of England. Nine people were killed when bombs hit a row of cottages in a working-class district of a town in Cambridgeshire during last night's air raid. A baby girl aged five months was killed in her cradle. The mother and father were rescued from the wreckage. A mother, father and baby boy of two were killed in another of the cottages. A boy of six died in hospital. Those who went to the scene of the bombing paid tribute to the morale of the neighbourhood. There was no sign whatever of any panic. A.R.P. services went into operation smoothly and efficiently. The A.F.S. speedily dealt with small outbreaks of fires and rescue and demolition parties removed most of the injured in a very short time. The man whose baby was killed, said that when the siren went he and his wife took their child downstairs where they remained for 15 minutes, and then thinking it was a false alarm went back to bed. "It was lucky we did because if we had remained downstairs we should certainly all have been killed, as the room in which we had been sitting was completely wrecked. My wife and I were lying in bed, with our baby in the cot beside us. There was a whistle and a boom and wreckage fell across me. I managed partly to protect my wife and I calmed her and then waited until I heard voices. I felt somebody stand on the wreckage which was pinning my shoulder. I pushed by hand up and wiggled my fingers to attract attention. Helpers then moved the wreckage from my wife and myself. I was only scratched, my wife was bruised but my little daughter was killed in her cradle." A family who lived in the house next to that in which a mother, father and child were killed, had a remarkable escape. That are five members of this family. A son, told a reporter that they were sitting in a downstairs room with their backs to the stairs when the bombs fell. "Wreckage found around us and the light went out. I pushed at the door at the bottom of the stairs and it opened sufficiently to allow me to get upstairs. Wreckage, however, blocked the way. I pushed a piece of board and saw a shaft of light. I thought the light was on in the room above and was about to climb through to put it out when I suddenly realised that what I could see was the moon. The room above had been blown away. I made the gap in the wreckage a little larger and helped out the rest of my family. Had we stayed in bed instead of getting up when the siren sounded we should undoubtedly have been killed. "My sister who is to be married on Saturday lost her trousseau which was in a wardrobe now buried in wreckage. It was one she had made herself which makes it all the harder for her as she still intends to get married on the day fixed". Slates and chimney pots were blown off houses in the vicinity, but a church, which is about 30 yards away from the scene of the explosion was undamaged. Not even a pane of glass was cracked. An evacuee girl of about 12 years of age was amongst those taken to hospital. One man escaped unhurt, though his two children were killed. The sister of one of the girls who is dead owes her life to the fact that she was sleeping with another woman to keep her company. A rabbit in the hutch of a garden of one of the houses was recovered from beneath the wreckage none the worse for its ordeal. Broken timber and rubble of every kind is all that is left today at the house is which stood in a row. It was late last night when the bombs were dropped on the poorest part of the town demolishing eight of the little grey-bricked dwellings. The thud of the bombs was felt for some distance around. Windows in nearby houses were broken and roofs and chimneys of others smashed. One woman in a house nearby was blown off her seat. It is a district of narrow and congested streets and it is surprising there were not far great number of casualties. Today, after the ARP demolition squad had gone home their place was taken by Council workmen. They hacked through the debris, finding bits of broken furniture and household goods as well as stacking up bricks and pieces of timber. Household property was taken into the nearby Vicarage to be sorted out. Amongst the articles taken from one house was a clothes-horse full of washing and still almost spotlessly clean. Lying amid the wreckage of another house, a canary was discovered by demolition workers six hours after the houses have been brought to the ground and it chirruped merrily as it was taken away in a cage. Children's toys and a book of nursery rhymes were in evidence amongst the rubble – grim reminders of the little regard Nazi Germany, has for women and children. A demolition worker told a reported: "One man and his wife had the most miraculous escape. When we were one the scene we found them surrounded by rubble; in fact they were half-buried by it, still wrapped up in their bedclothes" One man said that cries had been heard coming from part of a house. Buried beneath the bricks and masonry was a chair in which a lady had been sitting. She was trapped there in a semi-conscious condition. A tunnel was made beneath the rubbish and a soldier crawled into it and held the chair while workers made frantic efforts to fasten a rope around it. He was there for three hours before they were successful and she was rescued badly injured. Nine die in raid. Nine people were killed when bombs hit a row of cottages in a working class district of a town in Cambridgeshire during Tuesday night's air raid over East Anglia. A baby girl aged five months was killed in her cradle. The mother and father were rescued from the wreckage. A mother, father and baby boy of two were killed in another of the cottages. A boy of six died in hospital. An eye-witness who saw an enemy plane brought down in Cambridgeshire, said that the machine was caught in the beam of a searchlight. (It may now be said that the cottages mentioned were in Vicarage Terrace off Norfolk Street. Cambridge)

Shot Down Eight Aircraft. In the list of R.A.F. awards published on Saturday appeared the name of Flight Lt. Nicholas Gresham Cooke son of the late Mr Arthur Cooke and of Coun. Mrs. Cooke. He receives the Distinguished Flying Cross. The official notice stated: "This officer, acting as flight leader, was responsible for shooting down eight enemy aircraft during two patrols". Mr. Cooke, who has held a commission in the Royal Air Force for the past five years, is now reported missing. He was educated at Marlborough and Trinity College, Cambridge and represented the University in sailing. With Mr. Peter E Scott, he represented England in 1934 in sailing against Canada. In 1938 he represented the R.A.F. in bob sleighing.

Fair Cancelled. It was an announced at the start of Thursday's meeting of the Cambridge Town Council that Midsummer Fair will not be held. Making the announcement, the Mayor (Coun. W.J. Wing) stated that up to a day or two ago it had been decided that the fair should be held, so that the people might make a little money. "But, considering what has happened recently," he added, "it has been felt that it would be unwise to hold this fair". That decision, which has the support of the Regional Commissioner, is also supported by an address from residents in the vicinity of the Common It has been decided, therefore, that we shall not hold the fair 40 06 21 # c.45.7 # c.27.31

Death of Mr. C. G. Worledge. A circle of friends over a wide area will learn with regret of the death of Mr. Charles George Worledge which occurred at the home of his son at Leamington Spa. Mr Worledge, who was 80 years of age, left Cambridge only about three months ago. Born in Essex, Mr. Worledge was associated with the firm of Messrs. Hallack and Bond as a commercial traveller for well over 36 years. Before coming to Cambridge, he travelled for a Saffron Walden firm. He had a long association with the Odd Fellows and was Past Grand of Earl Fitzwilliam Lodge and a member of the Henry Ratcliffe Lodge of Past Grands. An ardent lover of cricket, he was a familiar figure at Fenner's and up to last season acted as scorer for Camden Cricket Club for about 10 years. In his early days he was a playing member of the Rickling Green, club

Children for farm work. At a meeting of the Hunts. Education Committee on Wednesday, the Agricultural (Education) Subcommittee reported that they had under consideration the serious difficulty caused by the shortage of agricultural labour in certain areas in the county, and they were of opinion that the practice followed in the last war by which boys and girls over 12 years were released from school attendance at harvest periods without closing the schools should be followed. It was, however, understood that such leave of absence, if granted, would have to be subject to the observance of such conditions as would safeguard the health and well-being of the children. Various members voiced their opinions, and it was agreed to release the schoolchildren for such purposes, provided the parents gave their consent.

Death of Mr. Harry Hobbs. The death occurred in Huntingdon County Hospital on Sunday of Mr. Harry Hobbs, who, for the past 10½ years, had been manager of Messrs. Freeman, Hardy and Willis' High Street (Huntingdon) branch. Deceased, who was 49 years of age, and was a brother of Mr. Jack Hobbs, the England and Surrey cricketer, had been ill a long time. From August, 1914, to March, 1918, he served as a sergeant in the 11th Suffolk Regt. in France, and was badly wounded several times, losing the sight of one eye. After a period of convalescence he returned to France and served behind the lines. As a member of the Cambs. and Isle of Ely Athletic Association, he figured prominently in sprint events in Cambridge and district. He also played football for New Chesterton Institute.

Presentation. As an acknowledgment of his services as billeting officer for Histon and Impington, Mr. A. W. Smith has been presented with a fountain pen by members of the local panel. The presentation was made by Mrs. Frances Bennett, the present billeting officer.

Awarded D.F.C. Acting Flight Lt. J. W. C. Simpson. R.A.F., a native of Ramsey St. Mary, has been awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross. While leading a section over Northern France, he met a superior enemy force and destroyed three aircraft. In all he has accounted for seven.

Stacks Destroyed.—A large haystack and part of a stack of straw on the farm of Mr. W. Pepper, Melbourn Heath, were completely destroyed by fire on Saturday. Royston Fire Brigade received a call about 3.30 p.m., and under the direction of Second Officer Carter, rendered every assistance. Owing to the absence of a water supply, it was found necessary to pull the stack to pieces and burn it out. Chief Officer Witts took charge of the evening operations. The fire necessitated the attendance of the brigade until the early hours of Sunday morning. The stack had been thatched on the Friday, the day before the outbreak.

Sirens.—Denying once again the rumour that the air raid warning sirens "are not going to be sounded any more." Mr. F. Doggett, chief warden for Cambridge, stated at a meeting on Wednesday that they would still be operated when there was grave danger of bombing. He emphasised that the sounding of sirens in Cambridge did not necessarily mean that the town would be attacked. "Don't, please, get panicky," he said. "That is what Jerry is after. For goodness sake don't let him succeed in his first attempt to get you panicky because you have heard rumours, started probably with intention, that the sirens are no longer going to be sounded." # c.45.7

Golden Wedding. “Given good health, we could live it all over again." Thus said Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Gilbert, of 254 Mill Road, Cambridge, reviewing their married life on their golden wedding day. They were married at Christ Church on July 1, 1890, and in 1892 opened a grocer's business in Kingston Street. At the same time. Mr. Gilbert was bacon store manager for Messrs. Hallack and Bond. It was here, in 1904, that he fell down a lift shaft and was unconscious for three days. It may be added that Mr. Gilbert is a non-drinker and non-smoker. He retired from business in 1937. Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert have two daughters and a son, and speak proudly of their four granddaughters, Mr. Gilbert; is 74 and his wife 70, but both look at least ten years younger. In this respect it is interesting to note that Mrs. Gilbert made her own cake for the celebration supper.

Old Cambridge Inn Signs. Writing in a London journal (says Watchman) a student of old and-curious inn signs says that, in his opinion, one of the rarest of them is "The Chopping Knife," said by some to be a variant of, or rival to, the "Butcher's Arms," a sign which speaks for itself. A local correspondent tells me that there was once a "Chopping Knife" in Cambridge. A Dr. Palmer used to tell in one of his lectures of a Cambridge Vice-Chancellor (Fogg Newton. D.D.) who, on April 19 1611, certified that "honourable and creditable persons of Little St. Mary's Parish" had assured him (the Vice-Chancellor) that the "house known as 'The Chopping Knife' in the said parish hath sufficient worth and bedding for 20 persons and stables for 20 horses." and on this evidence the house was licensed for an inn. Other 17th century inns in the same parish were the "Green Dragon," "White Lion,' "Hoops," "Blue Anchor," "Golden Key," "Carpenter's Arms" and "Durham Arms."

Emergency Traffic Control. New directions for dealing with traffic in the event of invasion were issued by the Eastern Regional Commissioner (Sir Will Spens) on Wednesday, acting under powers conferred upon him. In a statement issued by the Eastern Regional Office of the Ministry of Information, it is explained that these directions empower chief constables, at the request of a corps or divisional commander, both to exclude all traffic (other than certain essential traffic) from any specified roads, and if it appears desirable, to prohibit the use of motor vehicles (other than those employed for essential services) within any area specified, and to require the immobilisation of such vehicles within the area. The statement adds: "The latter action, which is most likely to be applied in large towns, may be taken at very short notice, and it is vital that everyone concerned should accept the consequences." # c.45.7

Leys boys on the land. Boys from the Leys School, Cambridge (writes Watchman) have formed themselves into teams working under the supervision of their own masters for seasonal work on the land. They have recently been engaged on sugar beet hoeing. The July number of the 'Sugar Beet Review' has two pictures of them, taken on Mr. R. B. Taylor's farm, Ashley, near Newmarket, where the boys put in several days' work. About 50 boys were engaged on each occasion, with four or five masters, and they made an excellent job of about five acres per visit. Mr. Taylor - who has a 150-acre contract with the Bury St. Edmunds factory - first demonstrated how the work should be done, and then left supervision entirely to the schoolmasters. It speaks well both for the boys and their masters, that, with their help, more than 100 acres were singled. 40 07 19 # c.45.7 c.36.5

Awarded Military Cross, — One of four Cambridge brothers who are serving with the forces has been awarded the Military Cross. He is Lt. Frederick Morley Smith of the R.A.M.C., a son of the late Coun. Sidney Smith, and it is believed that he is the first Cambridge man to be thus honoured in this war. Lt. Smith is an Old Persean and a brother of Major S.I. W. Smith of the Cambridgeshires. He was working at Hull in civil life until the outbreak of war and then returned to Cambridge, where he acted for a short time as medical officer to the 2nd Battn, the Cambridgeshire Regt. He was then posted to a South country regiment and afterwards proceeded overseas. Lt. Smith is now on leave in Cambridge suffering from a wound in the head. No details of the act which led to the award are yet available.

Call-up Contrasts. — Many of the 1907 class registering at Cambridge on Saturday (for service) numbered 646. Three expressed preference for the submarine service, 48 for the Royal Navy and one either for the Navy or the Marines. Three hundred and thirty two men chose the RAF (20 for flying, 303 for ground staff) and nine for either ground or flying duties. There were five conscientious objectors. # c.45.7

After the party had been entertained to tea, the chairman of the committee (Ald. W. C. Jackson), Mr. Mansfield and the executive officer (Mr; J. A. It was emphasised that probably more regard will have to be paid to the growing of special food crops — crops which will prove of the greatest value from the national point of view. Later in the evening, the party were shown over parts of the farm and saw the work being done there in ploughing up grass land for the cultivation of animal crop's. # c.45.7 # c.36.9

Sunday opening of cinemas. After previously deciding against making representations for the war-time Sunday opening of cinemas, Newmarket Urban Council on Monday voted that the matter should again be considered. The question arose on a letter from the manager of the Doric Cinema. During the debate, Mr. J. O. White felt the opening would be a good thing. He moved that representations be made to the Home Office for Sunday opening for the duration of the war. Mr. S. G. Woollard, seconding, said it would be a cheap means of relaxing, and in the winter the men (of the forces) could get into the warm. The resolution was carried.

One bullet—four hurt. Four men were injured when a rifle went off accidentally in the bar of the Sun Inn, Waterbeach, on Sunday. The bullet first hit the floor, and then ricocheted, striking George Edward Cudworth, and John Wm. Utteridge. Fragments from the floor wounded Albert Murfitt and Arthur Gifford. All four men come from Waterbeach and all sustained injuries to the legs. They were taken to Addenbrooke's Hospital in the police ambulance. The rifle was being demonstrated by a soldier, who had been asked if he would do so by an old Army man. This man was unhurt. 40 08 02

M.C. for Cambs. man. Among the recent awards to soldiers in the Middle East is that of the Military Cross to Second Lt. W. V. Hamilton Cape. Aged 22, 2nd Lt. Cape is the surviving son of Capt. and Mrs. N. W. Cape, of Caxton Manor, Caxton. The incident for which the award is made occurred when Second Lt, Cape attacked a large Italian column which was protected by 12 tanks. During the battle, one of Lt. Cape's two armoured cars had a puncture. Despite heavy enemy fire, he changed the wheel, at the same time directing the second car to harass the Italians. This kept the enemy at bay until British reinforcements arrived, when the entire Italian column was destroyed or captured. It may be remembered that Capt. and Mrs. Cape's elder son, Flying Officer Roy N. T. Cape, was killed at Duxford in August. 1926. 40 08 02

River Rescue. — Two men, one of them a non-swimmer, were rescued from the Cam by an Army officer when their canoe overturned near Jesus College boat-house on Sunday afternoon. They were Harold Hinchliffe of 24, St. Catherine Street, and Wm. Prythetych of "Ellstan", Linton Road, Hadstock. The officer, who was in another canoe, picked them up and took them to the bank. They were both taken to hospital in an ambulance, but were allowed to go home after treatment. — Another week-end river rescue took place on Monday afternoon, when a four-year-old girl, Josephine Salmon, of 86 Suez Road, Cambridge, fell into the river while playing on the footpath near Victoria Avenue bridge. She was pulled out by a man who is at present unknown. Hot cocoa was given, to her at a nearby house, and she was then taken home wrapped in blankets.

A Patriotic Family.—Mr. Sidney W. Wright of Askey Row, Swavesey, who served in the Army in the last war from 1915 to 1919, and was wounded on three occasions, is again, wearing His Majesty's uniform. With him this time are his seven sons, four of whom are with their father in the Home Guard, two are in the Army and the seventh is having some exciting experiences in a minesweeper.

Local Man's Achievement. On Sunday Flight Sergeant Donald Kingaby, son of the Rev. E. P. Kingaby (Vicar of Impington) brought down one German aeroplane and damaged another, and on Monday he followed up his successes by bringing down two more enemy planes.

For Devotion to Duty. A correspondent writes:—It is not often that the village of Tadlow, on the border of Beds, and Cambs., comes into the limelight, but it did on August 7, when Sergeant-Major Charles W. Goodhand was presented with the medal of the Order of the British Empire, awarded for devotion to duty. Sergeant-Major Goodhand, who has 24 years' Army service to his credit, was wounded in his legs and arm in the last war, and he was with the B.E.F. in France from September last until the evacuation. Mrs. Goodhand (formerly Bunyan) and his ten-year-old daughter, Betty, were present at the presentation.

Duchess's Tour. The Duchess of Gloucester visited Cambridge on Tuesday. At an emergency hospital, the whole of the nursing staff, regular and auxiliary, were lined up and inside the ward, the royal visitor talked with some of the patients, including several members of the B.E.F. back from France. On leaving the Hospital, the Duchess chatted to nurses and members of a Scottish regiment. An R.A.F. sick quarters, which is entirely nursed by the Red Cross, was the next place of call. After inspecting two of the wards, the Duchess saw a short display of surgical work by the nurses. Proceeding next to the University examination Hall, now an emergency ward of Addenbrooke's Hospital, the Duchess saw some of the American ambulance units presented to the region. After inspecting the joint war organisation emergency hospital stores, the Duchess had tea with Sir Montagu and Lady Butler at Pembroke Lodge. # c.02 # c.45.7 # c.21.4

Golden Wedding. Messages of congratulation from all parts of the world were received on Monday by the Rt. Rev. J. A. and Mrs. Kempthorne, of Maris House, Trumpington, on the occasion of their golden wedding. The first one they opened came from the Archbishop of Canterbury. Dr. Kempthorne and his wife, who is the daughter of the late Master of Christ's College, Mr. Peel, were married in the college chapel on August 19, 1890. Dr. Kempthorne has held appointments in many parts of the country, including Hull, when he was Assistant Bishop to the present Archbishop of Canterbury, who was then Archbishop of York. In addition, he was Bishop of Lichfield for 23 years, retiring three years ago. On his retirement. Dr. Kempthorne and his wife made a trip round the world, and then settled down in Trumpington. Though he is 76 (his wife is three years younger), Dr. Kempthorne still travels about frequently, preaching in various places.

Last night’s raids … Wales, South-East … Roof off – but crockery unbroken. It is believed that altogether six high explosives bombs were dropped on another South East town. Two fell within a few feet of houses and although windows were shattered no casualties were reported. One bomb fell a few feet beyond the end of the street of houses behind a hedge, the thickness of which took most of the force of the blast. Part of the roof of one house was dislodged and practically all the windows smashed but crockery in a cupboard immediately facing the bomb crater was unbroken. The occupier, Mr. R.J. Shipcott said: “We had just gone back to bed when we heard the whistle of a bomb and a terrific explosion. Glass from the windows was blown onto the floor by the side of the bed, but we were not scratched.” The bomb crater was about 10 feet wide, and 6 feet deep. A second bomb fell in the roadway of a thickly-populated district, not far from the centre of the town. And a third fell on farm sheds. No casualties were reported.

Three days later the Cambridge Daily News published photographs

Bishop of Ely's Health. The Bishop of Ely (Dr. B. O. F. Heywood), who left the Palace about a fortnight ago, for a rest cure under doctor's orders, returned to Ely on Monday (writes Watchman). Unfortunately, this does not mean that Dr. Hey wood has been returned to health, but it is hoped that the rest he is continuing to take will soon bring about the desired effect. A vigorous worker who does not spare himself, the Bishop, who is in his 70th year, has found that the willing spirit has overtaxed the none-too-robust body.

Golden Wedding. Bishop Price is deputising in many ways for the Bishop of Ely, and on Tuesday next he and Mrs, Price will celebrate their golden wedding. Bishop Price's association with the diocese dates back to 1919, in which year he was appointed Vicar of Pampisford, Assistant Bishop and Arch … was appointed residentiary Canon of the Cathedral, when he resigned from the living of Pampisford. For well over half a century Dr. Price, who is 77, has rendered devoted service to the church, first as a missionary in West Africa and the Far East, and latterly in this diocese. Locally he is connected with various organisations.

King Inspects Cambs. Men. Members of the Home Guard from the Cambridgeshire zone were among those inspected by the King during his tour of defences in East Anglia on Friday. About 200 men were drawn up outside a railway station under the Zone Commander for Cambs. (Major W. N. Phillips), the Cambs. detachment being under Vice-Admiral Lake and a detachment from the Isle of Ely under Mr. Levitt. After Major Phillips had been presented, His Majesty chatted to several men in the detachment, most of them old soldiers of the last war who wore the honours won then. Among the Cambs. men with whom his Majesty talked were ex-R.S.M. Harvey, D.C.M., formerly of the West Yorks Regiment, R.S.M. Harmer, D.C.M., of March, late of the 14th Hussars, and an 18-year-old telegraph boy now in the Home Guard. Before leaving, the King sent a message congratulating the men on their smart appearance, and he left to the sound of three ringing cheers. # 40 08 30 # c.02 # c.45.7

Death of Mr. W. H. Francis. A familiar figure in Cambridge, of which he was Mayor before the Great War, Mr. Walter H. Francis, passed away on Thursday at the age of 82. His home was at 3 Grange Road and he had been in failing health for some time. Since the death of his brother (Mr. Musgrave Francis) Mr. Francis had been senior partner in the Francis and Co., solicitors of Peas .Hill. He was a brother of Mr. Henry Francis, a well-known member of the County Council, who died a short time ago, and of Major Wolstan Francis, of Quy. Mr. W. H. Francis was a member of the Town Council for 23 years. He was first elected in June, 1902, and was made an alderman in 1914. He did not seek re-election in 1925. He was Mayor of Cambridge in 1912-1913, and his year of office was made memorable by his outspokenness and his independent attitude at various functions it was his duty to attend as Mayor. At a sale of work he once expressed his disagreement at such a method of raising money. On another occasion - the opening of Melbourne Place School - he criticised the scheme. Politically he was a staunch Conservative, and he was a churchwarden at St. Andrew the Great for a great many years, relinquishing the office about two years ago. # c.35.7

Salvationists' Diamond Wedding. Two Salvation Army veterans who took part in Cambridge's first Army open-air service, celebrated c their diamond wedding anniversary on Wednesday. They are Mr. and Mrs. F. Gillson, of 67 Mill Road, now staying at 12 St. Phillip's Road, Cambridge, who were married in St. Matthew's Church at 8 o'clock on September 4. 1880. "There was no such thing as confetti in those days," Mrs. Gillson said. "They threw rice, which stung your face." Mr. Gillson is 80 years old and his wife 78, and they can remember clearly their first march through Cambridge as Salvationists. "The Norwich band came here to be present at the opening of the Cambridge Corps about 55 years ago," said Mr. Gillson. "My wife and I met the band at the station, and marched through Regent Street, St. Andrew's Street, Hobson Street, King Street and the Causeway, finishing up at Sturton Town Hall. We got a hiding for our pains, too. We were pelted with clods of earth from Butt Green, and one enterprising person threw an old cat at us. The police had been told to stop us holding an open-air meeting. We held it, all the same, in Hobson Street, by walking very slowly, singing all the time. Our main meeting was held at Sturton Town Hall." Mr. and Mrs. Gillson have stuck to the Army through thick and thin. It was popular at first to manhandle the "Sallies" and on one occasion they were besieged by a crowd of students in their citadel. 40 09 06

Death of Master of Trinity. By the death of the Master of Trinity (Prof. Sir J. J. Thomson) which occurred on Friday, the world of science has lost one of its most famous sons. Known throughout Cambridge as "J.J.," he had been Master of Trinity since 1918, and was the oldest head of a Cambridge college. His death took place in the college with which his connection had extended for over 60 years. Although he had few interests in the town the Master of Trinity was a very familiar figure about the streets. The King sent a telegram of sympathy to Lady Thomson. Paying tribute to Professor Thomson, Prof. W. L. Bragg, Cavendish Professor of Experimental Science, said: "His great contribution to science was his pioneer research into the structure of the atom, which was the start of a new era in physics. J. J. Thomson discovered the electron —a particle or corpuscle (as he liked to call it) which forms part of the structure of all atoms. The Research School which he built up at the Cavendish Laboratory, was a great piece of pioneer work —one of the first of its kind. Many of the early students afterwards became famous, the greatest being Lord Rutherford, who succeeded him in the Cavendish Chair." The funeral took place in. Westminster Abbey. # c.36.9

Killed by Drifting Balloon. A man was killed and considerable damage done when a barrage balloon drifted over Cambridge yesterday afternoon. The dead man was Daniel Dunston, a platelayer, of 146 Mill Road, Cambridge. Aged over 60, he was near the railway between Mill Road and Coldham's Lane bridge when he was caught by a steel cable trailing from the balloon. He was carried for a distance of over 30 yards and then dropped, sustaining fatal injuries. Before the accident the balloon had passed over the town at a considerable height. In the Mill Road area it came lower, and the cable threw a wireless pole through the roof of a house in Mill Road. The interior of the house was not damaged and no-body was injured in this incident. The balloon then gained height and drifted in the direction of Teversham. At Teversham Hall an old chimney stack on a scullery was struck by the cable. A piece of the cable was snapped off and the balloon at once shot up into the air and continued in an easterly direction. Telephone wires were damaged and the electricity supply for a village was affected for a time. 40 09 13 # c.45.7 # c.26.1

Foolish war-time names. All praise, say I (writes Watchman) to the Rev. J. A. F. Ozanne, of Bassingbourn, who is making a welcome stand against giving children foolish war-time names. Many children, says Mr. Ozanne, according to the "Daily Mail", are being christened 'Siren", because they were born in an air raid. "One might just as well name a child 'Foghorn' or 'Basin'", he says, “because it was born on the high seas. I have always refused to baptise any child with out-of-the-way names."

Boxing. So well supported was the boxing tournament on the Newmarket Town ground on Thursday last that it is expected that over £70 will be raised for the Newmarket and Racing Industry Spitfire Fund. The attendance, which numbered over 1,000, included Air Vice-Marshal Baldwin and a large proportion of officers and men of H.M. forces A fine programme had been arranged between R.A.F. and Army teams, but, unfortunately, owing to unavoidable circumstances, the programme had to be considerably curtailed, although not before some excellent fights had been seen. Good care was taken to see that the "stars" were among those who appeared. A.C. Cars and Invasion.—A further warning to the public concerning the necessity for carrying out at once any order for the immobilisation of motor vehicles was issued on Monday by the Eastern Regional Commissioner (Sir Will Spens). The Commissioner's warning, which followed an earlier statement issued on Thursday, declared: "Owners of motor vehicles should, in their own interest, understand the necessity for immediate compliance with any order which may be given for the immobilisation of motor vehicles, if invasion is taking place. In the event of any failure by the owner, the police or military will inevitably have to use rough-and-ready methods of immobilisation, involving serious damage to cars. The same will apply in the case of any attempt to use vehicles in areas where such use has been prohibited." # c.45.7

An army sentry at an aerodrome in Cambridgeshire told an inquest that when he went off duty at a pill box he left his rifle outside while he answered the 'phone. The rifle was loaded, according to orders, but the breach was empty. Almost at once he heard a shot and saw Private Stokes, from Barnet, sink to the ground. The other sentry said that he was at the pill-box and while putting on his equipment left his rifle outside. “I picked up a rifle intending to clean it”, he said. “I pulled the trigger and a shot was fired. Then I realised it was not my rifle. Stokes was three or four yards away and I knew the shot hit him”. His own rifle had been unloaded earlier. Medical evidence was given by Dr Davison. He found the bullet had passed through the chest and out at the back. Death was due to internal haemorrhage. The Coroner ruled that the man had been accidently shot in the execution of his duty and expressed sympathy with the relatives. 40 10 02a, 40 10 04a # c.45.7

Golden Wedding Days. Two Cambridge couples have just reached the golden anniversary of their weddings. Mr. and Mrs. William Charles Stacey, who celebrated their golden wedding on Friday at Annesdale House, Mill Road, were formerly well-known in Newmarket, where they resided for many years. Mr. Stacey worked as a painter and decorator for Mr. Peck, Newmarket, and other employers. He and his wife were married at Isleham Parish Church, and although 76 and 77 respectively, have excellent health. They came to live with their daughter, Mrs. Haylett, at Annesdale House, a few years ago. They have two sons and a daughter living and four grandchildren. One son was killed in the last war. In celebration of the anniversary, a family party is to be held on Monday.—Five years after their wedding 50 years ago, Mr. and Mrs. William Loker came to live in Great Eastern Street (Cambridge), and they have lived there ever since. They have occupied No. 2, Great Eastern Street, for the past 36 years, moving there from No. 14. Mr. and Mrs. Loker, who are 73 and 72 respectively, were married at Holy Trinity Church, Wimbledon, on September 28, 1890. Before coming to Cambridge, they lived at Little Shelford for five years. Mr. Loker's connection with the Foresters' Hope Lodge at Little Shelford extends over 57 years, and he has held every office, including that of Chief Ranger. He worked at Foster's Mill, near the station, for 37 years, retiring seven years ago.

Fewer Students. Full term at Cambridge on Monday at the start of the second year under war conditions saw the number of students up still further reduced from last year's figures. Instead of the normal peace time total of 5,000, it is estimated that the number of men coming up will be only 2,500. Graduates, as well as undergraduates, have left on national service of one form or another, but the Union authorities have arranged for teaching to be given in all faculties. Third year men of course, represent only a small fraction of the total coming up, while the number of freshmen is only a little over half that usually to be found second year men are in the majority by far, and the number is estimated to be only 20 below normal. # c.45.7 # c.36.9

Church hit by bomb. Bombs were again dropped on various parts of East Anglia during Sunday night, but the most serious damage appears to have been to a village church. In the area four high explosive bombs were dropped, but no casualties have so far been reported. At the church, the bomb fell on the tower and continued into the churchyard. Chancel, choir stalls, organ and pulpit were all undamaged, and all the stained glass, which was covered with thick brown paper, was unbroken. The church holds about 250 people and a service had been held there in the evening. Recently £200 was spent on renovation to the fabric and the bells. Another village a few miles away also received several bombs, but no information has been received of serious damage or casualties and some of the bombs are known to have fallen m open fields. (Note. News of this description was subject to war-time censorship). # c.45.7 # c.83

Nazis Surrender to Woman. When a Junkers 88 bomber was shot down: at Stuntney, near Ely, on Wednesday afternoon, two occupants, aged about 18 to 20, threw down their revolvers and gave themselves up to a woman, who was the first person on the scene. The two other members of the crew, who had baled out by parachute, were captured in Soham Fen and taken to Newmarket. The machine had been badly damaged by R.A.F. fighters and was finished off by another fighter. The Nazi pilot crashed on Mr. Owen Ambrose's farm at Quanea Fen. Later, Mr. Ambrose told a reporter "The plane touched down in a ploughed field, jumped a ditch and came to rest in a beet field. The first person on the scene was Mrs. Ashman, who lives at the farm. As she approached the two men, they emptied their revolvers and threw them away. Other men from the farm came up and the Germans were driven away in a lorry by Mr. Brooks." The two who baled out were uninjured. # c.45.7

Husband must obey! One woman got her own back at Cambridge on Saturday, when her husband was forced publicly to agree to obey all orders she gave him. This resounding "victory" was won at a special meeting of the Cambridge district of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Manchester Unity, when Brother Jack M. Woodford was initiated as Provincial Corresponding Secretary by his wife, who happens to be the Provincial Grand Master. Bro. Woodford agreed at his institution to obey all the orders which the Grand Master and committee might give, so he is therefore responsible to his wife in his new post!

Compulsory billeting. Compulsory billeting powers have already been used in Chesterton rural district, and one billeting officer at least has resigned rather than countenance their use. In 12 cases compulsion had been used, reported Mr. M. S. Pease chairman of the Public Health Committee, to the council meeting on Tuesday. The success of compulsory billeting had, he said, "far exceeded our hopes." "In selecting," he said, " what the war communiqués refer to as targets, we have decided that compulsion should be used more against those larger houses where strangers can be accommodated with less interference of the occupier's domestic arrangements than a smaller house." The chairman (Mr. S. C Lamb) said that as a council they had fought hard against resorting to compulsory billeting. Ultimately he had decided to notify the public officially of the legal position and wrote a letter to the Press explaining that there never had been a voluntary system, but always a compulsory one. # c.45.7

New Chairman. After a double ballot, owing to the absence of a clear majority on the first count, Mr. W. C. Jackson was appointed Chairman of the Great Ouse Catchment Board on Friday in the place of Mr. M. G. Townley. The appointment, which is for three years, carries with it a Salary of £500 a year. Voting was conducted by ballot, and on the first count Mr. Jackson received 14 votes for the chairmanship, Mr. W L. Raynes 12 and Mr. M. G. Townley two. On a further vote between the first two candidates only, Mr. Jackson was declared elected by 16 votes to 13.

Bungalow burnt out. A bungalow in Cambridge Road, Great Shelford, belonging to Mr. G. E. Evans was completely gutted by fire on Wednesday. The outbreak started just after ten o'clock, when, it is believed, something in a room was ignited from the fire, and before the flames could be extinguished the whole room was ablaze. The Borough Fire Brigade was called, and regular men, assisted by members of the A.F.S., soldiers and several local special constables, fought the blaze for two hours before it could be brought under control. Fear that the fire would spread necessitated the removal of furniture from an adjoining room.

Air- Raid. An enemy plane dropped a high explosive bomb in a field shortly after midnight on Friday. Fortunately the only damage done was to the windows of several houses. Two semi-detached houses had the front window frames completely blown out and another house was also damaged. A woman and daughter, the tenants, were in bed and a clock on a chair was lifted on to the bed and struck the woman. All the pans and crockery in the scullery were thrown to the floor and broken and the back door to the kitchen was lifted from its hinges. There were no casualties. Several other houses in the villages some distance away had windows broken. # c.45.7

A Lost "Muckinger." — An octogenarian farm worker in a South Cambs village (writes Watchman) was heard one day last week to lament the loss of his "muckinger" in the fields and he hoped any one finding it would return it to him, as it was a present from his daughter in London. A correspondent interested in old words and sayings, told of the incident, informs me that "muckinger" is an old colloquial name for the large red cotton pocket handkerchief in common use by farm workers. The name is heard more often in Essex than Cambridgeshire and it is interesting to note that the word heard last week was voiced by an old inhabitant of Heydon, a village which, in September, 1895, was (with its neighbours Great and Little Chishill) transferred from Essex to Cambridgeshire. # c.39

Horse-sense on the Farm. A Fenland correspondent (writes Watchman) is of opinion that he can explain the word "Waukenmella," a term used by Essex, and perhaps other farm hands, when it is desired to instruct a horse to turn left, a Heydon happening to which reference was made last week. "Waukern-ella", or like-sounding word, he opines, is simply a corruption of the age long instruction "Whoa. Come hither," when a horse is to turn to its left. "In the Fenlands," he says, "whoa is now often omitted and only 'Come hither' used, but in other parts of the country, notably in Essex, the three-word instruction seems to be used, as it has been for generations."

A Tragedy. — The following note by the Vicar appears in the current issue of the Melbourn Parish Magazine: On Saturday evening, a poor, homeless wayfarer stepped into the road, and was knocked down by a passing car. He died as a result of his injuries. He was buried in our cemetery. The priest, the undertaker and two of his helpers were all that were present. His relations, if he had any, will never hear of his death. How thankful most of us should be for home, friends and love."

47 Years a Solicitor. — We regret to announce the death of Mr. S. J. Miller, which occurred at his home, "Gilmerton," Trumpington, on Tuesday. Mr. Miller, who was 70 years of age, was a Cambridge man, educated at the Perse School, and University School, Hastings. He had been practising law in Cambridge since 1893. During the last war he was national service representative for Cambridge, and was for 15 years secretary of the Cambridge Conservative Club. Mr. Miller, who was -married in London 42 years ago, leaves a widow and a married son and daughter.

D.F.M. for Cambs. Man. — The D.F.M. has been awarded Sergt Donald Ernest Kingaby, only son of the Rev. P. F. Kingaby, Vicar of Impington, and Mrs. Kingaby. Sergt. Kingaby, a member of 92 Squadron, R.A.F., has displayed great courage and tenacity in his attacks against the enemy, and it is officially stated that he has destroyed at least nine enemy machines, four of which he shot down in one day. On one occasion his plane caught fire over the sea, and he baled out at 10,000ft falling into a field near Whitstable. On another occasion he crashed on landing at another place in Kent, but was uninjured.

River Rescue. Writing from 66, Hills Avenue, (Cambridge), Mr Thomas C. Catlin states: "Will you allow me space in your valuable paper to express my sincere thanks and gratefulness to the gentleman who on Monday night dived into the river Cam in the fog and darkness, near Chesterton, and rescued my son from drowning? It was a very gallant and heroic action on such a. night. I would also like to thank the girls, who, returning home from work, went back to fetch help, and therefore helped to save the boy's life. A Phenomenal November. According to the village octogenarians, last month was the wettest November in living memory (in Melbourn), and possibly the wettest on record. The average November rainfall in Melbourn is 2.20 ins., but last month rain was registered on 23 days, the wettest being the 4th (1.08 ins.), and the 14th (1.03 ins.) and the total for the month 6.20 ins. An authority on meteorology says that the heaviest rainfall, ever recorded for a single month in this country was 7.21 ins., and the date, June, 1903.

Outbreak of fire. The lane adjoining the village green (at Melbourn) was the scene of an alarming outbreak of fire at 1 p.m. last Saturday. In this lane the men engaged in putting down water pipes through the village had placed a caravan, wooden shed and a tarpaulin tent for the storage of material. The works foreman and his son furnished the wooden hut as a temporary home, and while they were absent the place caught fire, the fire spreading to the tarpaulin tent, both erections being burnt to the ground, the former occupants losing clothes, camp beds, money, portable wireless set, cooking .stoves, lamps and much other property. Mr. H. Stanford and Mr. W. J. Wiseman, members of the local fire brigade, were quickly on the scene, and managed to get the fire under control, but not before the caravan, in which lives the clerk of the works, was seriously damaged by the flames, also a large proportion of the garden fencing. The origin of the fire is unknown. 40 12 13

Bishop Resigns. — Many in the diocese will learn with regret that the Bishop of Ely (Dr. Heywood) has found it necessary to resign. The King has approved the resignation of Dr, Heywood, who had previously intimated to the Archbishop of Canterbury his desire to vacate the see owing to ill-health. The resignation will take effect on December 16. Dr. Heywood, who was appointed to the see of Ely in 1934 in succession to Dr. White-Thomson, was Bishop of Southwell from 1926 to 1928, when he resigned on account of ill-health. Later his recovery enabled him to accept appointment as assistant bishop of the diocese of York and Bishop Suffragan of Hull.

Mayoress Four Times. — The funeral took place on Tuesday of a former Mayoress of St. Ives. It was with deep regret that St. Ives learned on Friday of the death in the early hours, of the morning of Mrs. Beatrice Mary Johnson, wife of Aid. J. Johnson, of "Westwood." Following a recent illness, Mrs. Johnson made progress, but a relapse occurred a few days before she passed away at the age of 65 years. By her charming personality, Mrs. Johnson won all hearts and St. Ivians will remember with gratitude the service she performed for the Borough as Mayoress on four occasions when she so ably assisted Ald. Johnson as chief citizen. This was in 1919, 1920 (when Coun. J. R. Ingram died within a few days of taking office, Mr. Johnson stepping into the breach) and again in 1932.

The Christmas Turkey. Although authorities seem to be agreed (writes Watchman) about the date of the corning of the first turkey to England (it was during the reign of King Henry VIII) its place of origin is still a question often debated in certain quarters. The popular belief is that the bird was brought from Turkey, hence its name, but there appears to be strong evidence of its coming originally from the wilds extending from the South of Canada to Mexico, where it is, even today, the most plentiful. For generations large number of the bird have been bred and fattened, mainly in Cambridgeshire and Norfolk, to supply the London markets. Some old farm accounts of 146 years ago discovered and deciphered by Dr. W. M. Palmer, tell of 1,700 dead turkeys being carted along the Royston Road to London on a Sunday before the Christmas Day of 1793 the birds — all from one farm — weighed in all 9 tons 2 cwts, and were valued at £680. They were followed on the following Monday and Tuesday by 850 from another farm.

Died for his Country. News has reached Cambridge of the death in action of a young Cambridge man who was serving with the Royal Navyduring the great evacuation from Dunkirk. He was Ordinary Seaman V. G. Stearn, aged 18, who was reported missing, believed drowned, in May last. Educated at the Brunswick School, Stearn was a very keen swimmer, and held medals and certificates for success in this sport. After leaving school, he was employed for over a year at Messrs. Herbert Robinson and Son, Regent Street, Cambridge, and joined the Navy just before the outbreak of war. An elder brother is now serving with the R.A.F. in Egypt.

Golden Wedding. Mr and Mrs. Fred Gifford, of 20, Orchard Close, Oakington Road, Cottenham, celebrated their golden wedding on Christmas Eve. They were married at Cambridge Register Office 50 years ago and of their nine children, five sons and three daughters are surviving and. they have nine grandchildren. Both enjoy excellent health and are a remarkably active couple. Mr. and Mrs. Gifford held a reception on their anniversary at the home of their son-in-law and daughter (Mr. and Mrs. F. Beaumont, of 106 High Street) where they spent a happy time with their children and grandchildren.

Busy Day for Mayor. The war seemed to bring but little change in the Christmas activities in the various institutions in Cambridge. Turkeys were for the most part absent from the Christmas Day dinner menu, while for obvious reasons profuse paper decorations were avoided. Almost all the other attributes of the season — plum puddings, mince pies, crackers and of course, Father Christmas himself — were, however to be found and at several places cooks had done wonders in the way of producing Christmas cakes, often with icing. As usual, the Mayor and Mayoress (Ald. and Mrs. Brown) made the traditional long round of visits and in addition to the usual places of call, found time to call at the W.V.S. Services Club in St. Andrew's Street, where they saw some typical hospitality being enjoyed to the full.

Presentation. As a token of esteem, and to mark the close of a year in a seasonable way, Mr. W.S. Hudson, Eastern Area Supervisor for the Associated British Cinemas, was this week presented with a canteen of cutlery from the managers and assistant managers of the A.B.C. cinemas in his area. Mr. Hudson's area is a big one, extending from Oxford and Dunstable night to the coast and the tribute therefore comes from a good many A.B.C men.

Miniature fire blitz – incendiaries on Perse School – 41 01 16a, b, c

1941 01 17 CIPof
Miniature Fire Blitz.—A town in East Anglia was the scene of a miniature fire blitz early yesterday (Thursday). A famous public school dating back to about 1600 was badly damaged, and a garage and wireless store also suffered severely. Scores of incendiaries were dropped, but the magnificent work of the police and members of the Civil Defence services had all but a few of the bombs extinguished before they could do any serious damage and the value of prompt action by the fire watcher and others was again strikingly demonstrated. It was a tragic piece of irony that the headmaster of the school was himself bombed out of his house only a short time ago and as he stood watching firemen at work later in the morning, he told a reporter: "I fear the whole of the interior of the building has gone, but we have managed to save most of our papers". While he spoke, pupils' at the school continued to arrive as usual for their lessons, unaware of the disaster. The manager of the wireless store stated that the place was burned out in about four hours. 41 01 17 # c.45.7 # c.36.5

A giant mandrake. From Stretham comes the news that whilst engaged on Stowbridge, Mr. H. C. Holliday discovered a fine specimen of a mandrake (writes Watchman). It weighed over 30lbs, excluding the smaller side roots, and is 30½ inches round at the thickest part. Many consider it the largest they have ever seen, and the finder believes that its seed was carried from 'somewhere' by birds. Any doubters as to its size may inspect the root on payment of 3d. for the Comforts for Troops Fund. 41 10 17

Council Sued,—Plans, maps and huge cases of documents, some of which dated back to 1660, were in court at Cambs Assizes on Friday for an action brought against Chesterton Rural District Council. The case concerns a claim for damages on account of flooding on land at Wilbraham.

Fighting Fen Floods. — The Special committee set up by the Cambridgeshire County Council to consider Sir Murdoch Macdonald's scheme for the protection, of the Fens against flooding will make their report to the Council tomorrow. The report includes a note prepared by the Clerk of the Council in which he recalls the three methods of approach which have been put forward at different times by different people. The methods are (a) Deepen the Tidal River. This is possible only if silt is prevented from coming in from the sea. It therefore means either a barrage to keep salt water and silt from entering d, the river or an extension of training walls to deep water, (b) Divert the water at Denver into of a new channel parallel to the Tidal River. At some point nearer on the sea it would have to be pumped into the Tidal River, (c) Remove the upland waters to a new channel on the edge on the of uplands, the new .channel discharging below Denver and being available to receive (by pumping) the water awaiting discharge at Denver. # c.29

Pc George Smith told the Inquest that at 2.25 a.m. he was on duty in Histon Road, Cambridge when he saw a large plane flying very low.
It struck the roofs on one side of the road and then crashed into the houses on the other side of the road coming to rest on a tennis court at the back of the houses. The chief damage to the houses was to the roofs and top floors

With the help of other officers he searched the wreckage and found the bodies under the debris in the bedrooms of the respective houses. He also assisted other people out of the damaged houses, which were 145 and 147 Histon Road and numbers 1 and 2 Roseneath Villas.
A warm tribute to the work of the police in rescuing other residents in the damaged houses was paid by Miss Allen, two of whose sisters were amongst those who escaped.
An eyewitness who was on the scene few minutes after said that the first officer to arrive was no longer recognisable as a police officer, being covered with plaster and dirt from the debris in his strenuous efforts at rescue.
The Pilot Officer in command of the air craft describing the incident, said he was returning from a raid on Germany in very bad weather. A Squadron Leader said the pilot took the only possible action. The crew were uninjured. The coroner said it was a very regrettable accident. We were living in unusual times and unusual things happened, of which this regrettable incident occurrence was one. While civil defence personnel in Singapore town are dealing with damage and civil casualties caused by Japanese shelling and bombing, British, Australian, Indian and Malaysian troops are resisting every enemy attacks in considerable strength which developed yesterday afternoon . Today's Singapore communique adds that the defenders are disputing every attempt to advance further towards the heart of Singapore town. It says our troops had counter attacked on at least one point and established a new line. The Japs admit British counterattack but claim to have occupied the naval base in the north of the island. In these days the thoughts of us all our very much centred upon Singapore and I should be failing in my duty if I refrained from stressing very strongly the importance of not spreading rumours. It is natural that East Anglians should be particularly concerned as we have many of our friends and relations in the thick of things. Cambridgeshire men who joined up did not expect this war to be a picnic. They trained to help fight for the Empire and were prepared for any demands made upon them. It may be they have been called upon to perform a great service to the Empire which have considerable historic importance but history is not made without great sacrifices. The people of Cambridgeshire can keep a stiff upper lip and take it but do not let us add to pain and sorrow buy any unguarded statements. As soon as any official information is received we will assist to the best of our ability by passing on that information with the least possible delay. There are influential friends who have promise to keep this newspaper well informed it is a hard thing to have to say but there is nobody to whom you can apply for information. It is just a case of waiting until news arrives as it shortly will do from one source or another – 42 02 14 & c

Last local wearer.—A correspondent (writes Watchman) states that some time ago a few interested Cambridgeshire antiquaries tried to discover who was the last farm hand in the country to wear the smock front seriously. He says "seriously" because one often sees it worn nowadays in fancy dress parades. The investigators came to the conclusion that the smock was last worn by an old shepherd at Little Abington, near Linton, somewhere about the year 1892. My correspondent goes on to say the smocks were worn on Sundays as a sort of best dress, long after it was customary to wear them as a working dress, and that a clean smock, corded breeches, worsted stockings, a beaver or other make of top hat and greased lace-up boots formed the approved rural costume for Sabbath and holiday wear. A little more than half a century — in some parts of Cambridgeshire a full century — however, has passed since the gabardine or smock was as honourable & distinction of carters and shepherds as the uniforms of the men in our fighting forces today. 41 02 21 # c.39

Ten Die in Raid. — Ten people are known to have been killed and a number of others injured when a fairly concentrated attack was made on an East Anglian town (Cambridge) on Monday night. Six of the dead are women and four men. Three of the injured are stated to be in a serious condition. The fatal casualties included an elderly air raid warden, Mrs. Charles Gent and several other fire watchers who were standing in the road outside a hotel. Sapper Day and Mr. Brittain were among the other victims. Hund-reds of incendiary bombs and a considerable number of high explosives were dropped by the raiders, which flew over very low at intervals. Many flares could be seen in the sky around the outlying parts of the town and British fighters were heard overhead. The main brunt of the damage was borne by business and commercial premises in one street, where for some distance along both sides of the road (Hills Road) shops were demolished or damaged. Hardly a pane of glass intact in this district and several houses in side streets nearby suffered broken windows. It was in this area that two of the other fatal casualties, Mr. A. Negus and Mrs. Robertson, occurred. An eyewitness said next morning that during the raid a German plane appeared to fly over the road dropping incendiaries and was followed a few minutes later by another machine, which dropped high explosives. It was these which caused a large number of casualties. In another district a single high explosive bomb landed directly on a house, killing the Misses Barker, who were in the building at the time. Neighbours were also injured, but not seriously. The three others to lose their lives were Miss Thaxter, Mrs. Woodcock and Mr. Ashman. # c.45.7

Relics of a Former Industry. — In Cambridge market recently (writes Watchman) a farmer was heard to complain about the growth of teasels in one of his pastures, saying that try as he would, he could not get rid of them. He wondered how they came to grow there, as old inhabitants of the district had told him they had no knowledge of any teasels being planted in the field. It was then that a brother farmer ventured to explain the presence of teasels on the land, and his remarks may be of interest

(says a correspondent), as teasels are by no means uncommon in some parts of the county. Centuries ago, particularly during the reign of Richard Third (1483-85), the baize industry flourished in East Anglia and later Colchester and Norwich became centres of the industry, with the result that teasels used for raising the nap of the material were grown in large quantities for manufacturers. 41 02 28

Smock Wearing Shepherd, — Writing from 57 New Road, Sawston (says Watchman), Mr. Alf A. Hills states: "I was greatly interested in the letters from your readers of 'The Passing Hour" last week in regard to the shepherd mentioned there Mr. E. Gilbey, who is living with me, informs me that the name is spelt quite correctly and that his name was William Gooden, an uncle of his wife's, whose maiden name was Jessie Gooden. This old gentleman used to wear his smock on Sunday as well as weekdays, and as far as Mr, Gilbey remembers, used to visit him at Worsted Lodge (in smock) in 1905. # c.39

Saffron.—The Rev. E. Conybeare - (writes Watchman), in his "Highways arid Byways in Cambridge," makes special mention of saffron in this district, saying that until the 19th century Cherry Hinton fields were bright with the flowers of the saffron crocus, which was grown, as it was by the ancient Greeks and Romans, for medical use and for dyeing purposes; indeed, its cultivation may very probably have been introduced into Britain by the Romans. Not only was the saffron grown here, but it was, in the words of Mr. Conybeare, "considered the best in Europe, and fetched no less than thirty shillings a pound." Its cultivation abounded" during the 15th, 16th and 17th centuries, and in 1678 it was officially stated that one acre of saffron yielded on an average 12 pounds of good saffron. The industry died a lingering death during the 18th and early part of the 19th century.

A Village Record?—The war comforts knitting party in Ickleton have now knitted 2,000 comforts since November, 1939. The members are keener than ever, and' more keep joining, there being now just over 100.

Mr, G, D, Richardson.—-The funeral of Mr. George Dennis Richardson, who died in Addenbrooke's Hospital, following an accident, took place at the Parish Church (Bartlow). Deceased had lived all his life in Bartlow, having worked on the Bartlow Hall estate since he was nine years of age. He belonged to one of the oldest families in Bartlow, and was greatly respected by all in the village. He will be sadly missed at the church, where he was so regular in attendance. The church was filled with friends, who had come to pay their last tribute. Among them were two members representing the Linton Lodge of the Loyal Order of Ancient Shepherds, of which deceased had been a life-long member and over 40 fellow-workers on the estate.

Shelling out with a vengeance. From Mrs. Joshua Barnard, of Barton Road, Haslingfield (writes Watchman) I have had this interesting letter—Dear Watchman, I've a hen that has laid three large eggs, one every third day. The measurements are 9½ inches round lengthwise, seven inches round the centre; they weigh six ounces each. Is this a record? I wonder if any one of my readers can equal or surpass this.

The Young Idea. From Miss Watson, of Swaffham Bulbeck (says Watchman) come, the following amusing instances of intriguing sayings by children. Small evacuee admiring border of yellow and mauve crocuses saw a few had fallen down after the rain: "I should fink they've been fighting. Mum."—Small boy under school age talking about his new sister, three weeks old, remarked: "What will she do when she grows up, Mum—go to Olivers?"

Mr. A. Hagger. By the death of Mr. Arthur Hagger, which occurred on March 12, Bourn and district has lost a well-known and greatly respected resident. For over 50 years, Mr. Hagger had successfully carried on the business of a baker and corn merchant, and for over 30 years was sub-postmaster at Bourn. He served as a sidesman, at the church, and later as churchwarden. He was also a trustee of the local Court of Foresters. There was a large attendance at the funeral.

Flying Accident, Corporal Jack F. W. Dunn has been killed in a flying accident while on active service. He was the youngest son of the late Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Dunn, of 52, New Street, Cambridge. Jack was an old Central School boy and on leaving school he worked at Messrs. Herbert Robinson's, Mill Road, and then at Messrs. A. Macintosh and Sons until he joined the R.A.F. about six years ago. Before joining the R.A.F., he was in the local Territorials, and was a keen machine gunner. He was very keen on boxing and belonged to Billy Pitt's old school

College blaze. Extensive damage was done by a fire which broke out in the north wing of Pembroke College (Cambridge) in the early hours of Saturday. The fire is believed to have started in one of the bedrooms of an upper storey, and the flames quickly spread along the whole length of the block under the roof. A fire-watcher raised the alarm, and regular and auxiliary firemen were soon on the scene with several trailer pumps, in addition to the three regular engines. Fire squads from the laboratories across the road and the college fire squad also assisted in fighting the flames. They had secured such a hold, however, that it was two hours before they could be brought under control. Most of the damage due to the flames was in the roof and upper part of the block, but the thousands of gallons of water poured on the fire soaked through to the lower rooms. Many of the occupants of the block were roused from their beds when the seriousness of the outbreak was discovered, and some of them assisted in removing furniture to the court. The treasurer of the college (Mr. J. T. Spittle) said:' "It is impossible yet to estimate the damage, as we cannot get into some of the rooms. The damage, however, is extensive." # c.45.5 # c.34.75

Sexton's Record. I wonder (writes Watchman) if any parish clerks in Cambridgeshire can beat the record of Mr. Wm. Thomas Ayres, of Abbey Lane, Lode, who has just completed 50 years' service for the parish church of Lode. Mr. Ayres, who is still carrying on, thoroughly fit, at the age of 69, holds the posts of verger, clerk and sexton of the church. It was on Easter Sunday, 1891, that he began his service for the church under the Rev. John Holding. Since then he has served under the Revs. H. W, Forbes, H. Ellis, W. E. Ellis, W. E Lewis and, of course, the present Vicar, the Rev. G. F. D. Pitts. Mr. Ayres has kept an interesting record of his work, and he tells me that during the past 50 years he has attended no fewer than 475 funerals and 571 baptisms. He has heard the publication of banns on 254 occasions and has attended 211 weddings. Born in Lode, he has lived there all his life, and for more than half a century he sang in the choir, being also a member of the glee class. He is a keen sportsman, being a member of the cricket club for 40 years and still acts as hon. secretary. He is, too, very fond of a bit of shooting. Mr. and Mrs. Ayres have five sons, of whom three sing in the church choir. One is choirmaster, and another blows the organ.

Scolded Emperor. A nonagenarian, who always thrilled at the memory of having scolded a boy who became the Emperor of Russia has died in Cambridge. She was Miss M. A. Lucas, who was for 55 years the dearly loved and devoted nurse and friend of the family of the late Rev. H. A. Morgan, D.D., Master of Jesus College, Cambridge, and of the late Mrs. Morgan. Miss Lucas was aged 95. One of her friends and correspondents in later life was Sir Harry Lauder, who on leaving for his last great tour abroad, sent her a farewell greeting on the wireless. 41 04 04

Memorial Trees. The children of the Open Air and Special Schools (Cambridge) on Monday afternoon planted in the school grounds four groups of flowering trees—peach, hawthorn, pink and white cherry— as a memorial from the children and staff to Miss N. Cowles, their late head teacher.

Choice Joint. An amusing incident (says Watchman) was witnessed in the High Street, Huntingdon, last weekend. A small dog entered a butcher's shop and unbeknown to the man behind the counter, selected a choice joint. He was seen a little later trotting along with a forequarter of lamb larger than himself. And no one stopped him.

Vocalist and Sportsman. A well-known Cambridge vocalist and sportsman, Mr. Arthur Richard Beaten, of 33 Garden Walk, died on Tuesday at the age of 71. Mr. Benten, who was a native of Grimsby, had lived in Cambridge for 48 years, and had been principal alto of King's College for 34 years. He had been assistant librarian and later music librarian at King's. Before coming to Cambridge he was a school teacher and organist at Lincoln. As a follower of cricket, his keen knowledge of the game was well recognised, and Fenner's has lost a real personality. There were few better judges of a potential cricketer than Arthur, and many a Varsity team has he "selected" with unerring judgment after critically watching the earlier trial matches. It was a great joy to him also to attend matches on Parker's Piece when the younger generation were playing. The Cambridgeshire Cricket Association, of which he was a vice-president, will miss him sadly, for as a committee man he was very regular in his attendance and his comments always were worthy of consideration and in the best interests of the game. 41 04 11

London Comes to Cheveley.“The Rectory in the village of Cheveley (Cambs.) must be among the handsomest property now used by Friends." So states a note (says Watchman) in a recent "News" sheet issue by the Society of Friends' War Victims' Relief Committee, which announces that towards the close of last month this rectory was occupied by mothers and children from Stepney and Limehouse. These folk were selected from East End shelters in which the. Friends work. Most of the women had been to the country before — they returned because they could not stand living in other people's houses and the separation from their London friends. And they have come to Cheveley because they had been allowed to take some of their own essential furniture with them and live in a community of their London neighbours. To help them to make up their minds about coming, a film of Cheveley was made and shown in the shelters—which strikes me as being extremely accommodating, to say the least. "The scheme," says the 'News' note "would never have come into operation without the advice, help and encouragement of a Cheveley resident. Mrs Morriss, whose horse won the Derby a few years ago." There is, I believe, a similar 'Friends' centre at Wood Ditton for bombed-out people. # c.45.7 # c.65.6

Minister as Chaplain. The Rev. A. Manley, who has been resident minister at Royston Methodist Church for the last four years, has joined the R.A.F. as a chaplain, and he will leave Royston in the course of next week. Preaching his farewell sermon on Sunday evening, Mr. Manley said he was sorry to leave Royston for many reasons, one of which was because there had always been a friendship between the members of the church in the town and district and himself. At the close of the service, Mr. John Oliver, the society steward, on behalf of the church, presented Mr. Manley with a wristlet watch, and expressed the hope that he would have a successful and safe ministry with the R.A.F.

Interesting Trumpington Wedding. The wedding took place quietly at Trumpington Church on Saturday of Francis Wingate William Pemberton, elder son of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Pemberton, of Trumpington Hall, and Diana Patricia Woods, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Salisbury Woods, of St. John's House, Grange Road. The ceremony was conducted by the Rev. A.B. Wright (Vicar of Trumpington) and the Rev. C. C. H James, late vicar of St. Giles'. Dr. H. S. Middleton (Trinity College) was at the organ, and the Trumpington choir led the singing. The bride was given away by her father.

Judge Farrant Leaves the Bench. Few people (writes Watchman) who know the upright figure of His Honour H. G. Farrant would realise he is 77 years of age and I hear that his advancing years have led to his retirement from Bench activities in the County. Judge Farrant, as he is usually called - although he retired from the position of County Court Judge in 1937 - has been Chairman of the Cambridgeshire County Quarter Sessions since 1927, and of the Isle of Ely Quarter Sessions since 1921. It was in 1927, too, that he was elected Chairman of the Cambridgeshire Divisional Bench. Previously he had had experience in Worcestershire, having been appointed a Justice of the Peace there in 1909 about the same time as he became a revisionary barrister on the Oxford Circuit. Among the important positions which he has held was that of President of the Society of Chairmen of Quarter Sessions, to which he was elected in 1930. He has been a well-known figure in local sporting circles, particularly with the Cambridgeshire Hunt. 41 04 25

Social Centre Soon for Ely - Ely (writes Watchman) is on its way to solving its problem of finding a social centre for evacuees. I learn that the organisers have every reason to hope that they will be allowed to use premises in St. Mary's Street. Plans have been made and work can begin as soon as the sanction of the committee of management has been obtained. A committee of women, appointed by themselves, has been formed, and a squad of cleaners is ready to begin work. Crockery and tea-cloths have been bought, and a sewing-machine has been promised for the use of the many women who want to sew. Another acquisition is a piano.

March and May Frosts. One often hears quoted in the Cambridgeshire orchards the centuries old saying, "So many frosts in March, so many in May," and a correspondent who has kept records says this is a long way from being true today (writes Watchman). Whether or not a frost attacks fruit trees very badly depends very largely upon the position of the orchard; an orchard in one part of a village often being badly bitten while another in a more sheltered part will show little or no sign of a frost. But in no case in recent years, says my correspondent, have May frosts been as numerous or severe as the frosts of March. May seldom passes without a brief spell of very cold weather and there is another old saying, often heard in the country, which goes, "Many a night in May will make a cow quake."

An Appeal to the Stork? — Notice seen outside a Cambridge shop one day this week: "Wanted, girl or boy."

"Quads" in Cambridge. — The people of Cambridge town (writes Watchman) had a "quads" sensation 175 years ago. A correspondent interested in old parish registers stated that the register belonging to the church of the Holy Sepulchre (the Round Church). Cambridge, records the baptism of four children of Henry Coe, a shoemaker, of Bridge Street, two girls and two boys born at one time. Their baptism in the church is thus recorded: "November 5th 1766, William and Henry (sons) and Elizabeth and Sarah (daughters), of Henry and Mary Coe. These four children were all born at one birth on the night between the 6th and 7th October last." A newspaper of the time said that the procession to the church consisting of 16 sponsors, nurses, father, etc., was attended by a great concourse of people and that the mother was doing well. It was stated by the newspaper 42 years later (in 1808) that "Sarah the only one of the four that grew up, is still alive .today. One of the children died at the age of two months, another at 15 months and the third at 20 months."

Cambs. Police Chief. — Notification of the impending resignation of Mr. W. Winter, Chief Constable of Cambridgeshire, was received with regret at a special meeting of the Standing Joint Committee on Saturday. In a letter to the committee, Mr. Winter said his request was made on grounds of indifferent health. The committee accepted the resignation, but asked him to continue in office until a successor was appointed. Ald. W. C. Jackson who was re-elected chairman of the committee, in a tribute to Mr. Winter, mentioned that he had risen to the position of Chief Constable after starting in the ranks in Cambridgeshire.

Willingham's Big Boy. — Visitors to Willingham (writes Watchman) often hear from old inhabitants a strange story of a big boy or baby giant, and a correspondent who has been investigating the matter, sends me some particulars which appear not to be generally known. The boy was named Thomas Hall; he was born on October 31, 1741, and died on September 3, 1747; and although he was only five years and 10 months old, he grew almost to the height and proportions of manhood. He was so extraordinary that a famous surgeon, Dr. Dawkes, published a pamphlet about him, now rare and valuable, entitled "Prodigium Willinghamense". Some particulars concerning the boy were also communicated in 1744 to the Royal Society by a Mr. Almond, and these details were afterwards published in the "Philosophical Transactions"; his age was then two years and 10 months, and he was then 3ft 8½ inches in height and still growing, and was large in proportion. Mr. Almond, who was a native of Willingham, stated that the boy was then so strong as to lift and throw a hammer of 17 lbs in weight; he had the marks of puberty and a moustache. According to Dr. Dawkes' pamphlet, the boy grew at the rate of an inch a month until the end of March, 1745; in the next year he grew only 5 inches. In November, 1746, when he was five years of age, his height in his socks was 4ft 5½ inches, the length of his foot was 8 inches and the calf of his leg 10s inches in circumference, and he weighed one pound over 6 stone (85 lbs).

Starling Lights up Black-out. — That a starling sat on the electric switch and turned up the light was the novel defence put forward by a woman defendant when she appeared before the magistrates for a black-out offence. The Chairman said the defence was a very good one, but whether it was sound he was not so sure. They had decided to give her the benefit of a certain section of the regulations, and this he quoted, and the case would be dismissed

Snake. A particularly fine specimen of grass snake, 38 inches in length and of phenomenal girth, was caught and killed last week in Bury Lane, Melbourn, by Mr. Frank Harper. According to the old inhabitants who examined the reptile, it was "the largest ever caught in the village."

Invested by the King. At the investiture held by the King at Buckingham Palace recently, one local airman was decorated with the medal of the Order of the British Empire. The recipient was Sergeant Robert V. H. Haley, of 319 Milton Road, Cambridge, eldest son of the late Mr. J. B. Haley, who served for 25 years in the R.A.M.C. and was awarded four medals in the Great War. Sgt. Haley, won his award some eight months ago, but owing to serving with the Fleet Air Arm abroad, has only been in England about a month. Mrs. Haley (mother) and Sgt. Haley's fiancée of Edinburgh were both present at the Palace ceremony.

Ely Cathedral Railings.—I learn from the Dean of Ely (writes Watchman) that the Ministry of Supply has communicated with the Dean and Chapter requesting that the wrought iron railings around the cathedral be taken down to help the war effort. The Dean remarks that he does not like the idea at all and intended to write a letter to the Press on the subject in due course. Although he is anxious to help the war effort as much as possible, he considers that the removal of the railings may possibly lead to similar occurrences which led to the closing of the Lady Chapel some time ago. 41 06 06

New Bishop of Ely After the "threat" in the London Press that the new Bishop of Ely might be an Oxford man, it was something of a relief on Friday to learn that a member of a Cambridge college, had been nominated (says Watchman). For this and for other reasons, the selection of the Rev. H. E.Wynn, of Pembroke, is distinctly welcome, and the choice is one which, I am sure, must have given great pleasure to many in and around Cambridge. Possessed of a very likeable personality, and that very desirable quality, a sense of humour, Mr. Wynn is young for a bishop, for his two immediate predecessors were over 60 when elected; but an interesting point is that Dr. Chase, who preceded Dr. White-Thomson and Dr. Heywood, was just Mr. Wynn's age when he took up the diocesan duties in 1905, and was also, like Mr. Wynn, a distinguished member of a Cambridge college.

Longevity. Paragraphs in the London newspapers often tell of longevity in Cambridgeshire villages, particularly those in or bordering upon the Fens (says Watchman). In January, 1910, for instance, most of the daily newspapers told of Over being notable for its old people, saying that of a population of 860 there were 76 persons between 70 and 90 years of age. A remarkable instance of contemporary longevity occurs in the history of Oakington, a village figuring in the old records as Hokington. In the year 1315, during the reign of Edward the Second, there were living in the village at the same time one person 120 years of age, two who were upwards of 100, and two who were 95 years of age. These facts were recorded in the proceedings in a tithe cause, recorded in the register of Crowland Abbey.

Former Vicar.—The death took place recently at Devizes of the Rev. Justin L. Douglas, former Vicar of Godmanchester.

Golden Wedding,—Mr. and Mrs. C. Buttress celebrated their golden wedding at Teversham on June 9. They were the last couple to be married by the Rev. Knipe at Teversham Parish Church in 1891. Both were born at Teversham, have lived there all their lives, and have occupied their present home for 45 years. They have two sons and three daughters, 12 grandchildren and four great grandchildren. Many good wishes were received by the old couple, and all the family had a pleasant meeting in the evening.

Postman Honoured.—The King has awarded the Imperial Service Medal for long, zealous and meritorious service to Mr. Charles Potter, postman, of 10, Derby Road, Cambridge, who has recently retired from the Post Office after nearly 50 years' service. On Wednesday the medal was presented to Mr. Potter at the Sorting Office, Mill Road, Cambridge. Mr. G. W. Harding, the Acting Head Postmaster, made the presentation in the presence of a large gathering. He said Mr. Potter enterer the Post Office Service as auxiliary postman at Gt Wilbraham in 1893, when he was14 years of age.

One shilling a spoke. A colleague (writes Watchman) drew my attention a few days ago to the following advertisement to be seen on a Cambridge notice-board—Bicycle in pink of condition, rather camouflaged, seeks new position. Excellent references from previous master, willing to work all hours, Sundays included. Qualifications: One matured saddle; two wheels, nearly round; one brake almost works; one basket for shopping, books and babies; all for the unprecedentedly low figure of 25s.—Approximately 1s. a spoke.

Old-time names of villages. The recent paragraph giving the old-time names of several Cambridge streets has led a correspondent to compile from old books and documents a list of some old-time village names (says Watchman). Most of these old names, it may be said, are taken from the "Cambridgeshire"' section of "Magna Britannia." a valuable work compiled by the Rev. David Lysons and Mr. Samuel Lysons and published in the year 1808. The present-day name is given first, the old name following it in parentheses; Abington Pigotts (Abington in the Clay). Babraham (Baburham, Badburgham, and Badburham), Burrough Green (Burgh), Coton (Cotes), Croydon (Crawden), Fowlmere (Foulmire and Fulmere), Harston (Harlston), East Hatley (Castell Hatley), Hatley St. George (Hungry Halley), Hauxton (Hawkstpn), Cherry Hinton (Hinton), Oakington (Hokington), Isleham (Iselham), Horningsea (Hornsey), Kirtling (Chartelinge. Catlige and Catlage). Pampisford (Pamps-worth), Quy or Stow-cum-Quy (Stow-Qui), Thriplow (Triplow). There are, of course, very much older and more peculiar names to some villages, notably those in the Domesday Book, compiled in the time of William the Conqueror and finished in the summer of 1086. The above old names, however, are some which appear to have been in use in comparatively modern times, or, say, 133 years a so. 41 06 20

New County Chief Constable. Mr. W. H. Edwards. Supt. of the Taunton Division, was appointed Chief Constable of Cambridgeshire, in succession to Mr. W. Winter, at a meeting of the Cambridgeshire Standing Joint Committee on Saturday. Mr. Edwards is 40 years of age. 'The appointment was made by the committee from a short list of three candidates submitted after the joint sub-committee had interviewed eight of the 22 applicants for the post. Two of the three final nominations were of men aged 33 and 29, both graduates of the Metropolitan Police College. Among the 22 applicants were five Chief Constables from other boroughs. Mr. Edwards' record showed that he joined the Somerset Constabulary in 1920, being appointed a sergeant in 1933 and ail inspector in 1939. He has been superintendent of the Taunton Division since August last year. # c.34.7

Schoolboys' Capture. Last Friday, when Ronnie Whiting, Arthur Pateman and John Bedford, three Melbourn schoolboys, were playing beside a stream running between the village and Shepreth, they espied in the water, and were successful in capturing, a particularly fine specimen of fresh water lobster, known as a crayfish or crawfish, characterised, like its allies, by the presence of ten walking legs. It was greenish brown, about six inches in length, and weighed between four and five ounces. The creature was placed in a large glass jar, and exhibited to many interested persons. It has since been returned to the stream at the spot where it was found, and apparently none the worse for its experience in the hands of the lads who captured it. 41 06 27

Evacuees took part in all the activities.

Fierce blaze. Huntingdon was the scene of a disastrous fire on Saturday afternoon, as the result of which a motor garage and valuable materials were totally destroyed. The outbreak was at White's Service garage in Stukely Road, near the railway arch. It is thought that the fire originated from a short circuit wire, and the damage is estimated at £1.000.

Suspension of Feast. For the first time, it is believed, since its establishment many centuries ago, .there were no outward and visible signs of the annual village feast (at Melbourn) during the first week in July, and this caused great disappointment in many quarters, as its suspension had not been announced. The decision not to hold the feast was not arrived at until the night before the stalls, etc. were due to appear. Many visitors carne to the village from the surrounding district last Friday and Saturday, as during recent years the event has been one of the largest and most popular in South Cambridgeshire. The absence of the feast was not due to diminishing interest, but rather due to transport difficulties, petrol rationing and other war-time conditions. Feast Sunday, however, was well observed, many visitors coming into the village to see old friends-talk over old times, and to find home-made cakes and wines, for which Melbourn housewives are noted, up to pre-war standard.

Loss to Royston Methodism. A prominent figure in the life of Royston and Methodism in particular has been removed by the death on Friday, of Mr. William Henry Tobyn, of Clovelly, Old North Road, at the age of 71 years. Coming to Royston 22 years ago from Biggleswade, where he was born, Mr. Tobyn went into business with Mr. Wright as drapers and outfitters in Market Hill, and the firm of Messrs Wright and Tobyn became known for miles around. He retired about ten years ago. It was said of Mr. Tobyn that he lived for Methodism and the Methodist Church, and the Methodist Church and Sunday School owed much to his help.

Ald J.S. Conder. After a lengthy illness, Ald. J. S. Conder passed away on Saturday at his home at 324 Cherryhinton Road, Cambridge. He was 77 years of age. A - Cambridgeshire man by birth. Mr. Conder was a familiar figure in the town until November, 1939 when he had a stroke, which caused him to be confined to his bed. His interest in local government affairs, however, remained unbroken, and from time to time the Borough Education Committee, of which he had been chairman since 1927, heard messages from him indicating the continuance of that interest. He served the town well as Mayor in 1926-7 and earned for himself the title of "the tranquil Mayor" by his unruffled temperament.

Beer Shortage. Most of the ten licensed houses of the village (Melbourn) were short of bottled and draught beers during, the weekend, and a few of the inns were closed for a few days. The shortage was not due to any phenomenal thirst on the part of the villagers and visitors, but to the brewers cutting down supplies on the delivery days of last week.

Cambridge's 1780 Complacency. —Among the many historical MSS and letters written by eminent persons to be sold in London during August is one from the Younger Pitt, referring to the invasion scare of that time (writes Watchman). Pitt, who was at Pembroke College, wrote: "The alarm is, I suppose, great on the sea coast, but in this county (Cambridgeshire) our oxen, and horses graze in security, and the gentlemen of the University seem scarcely more affected than the brute creation." A correspondent, who calls attention to the letter says it was written during the wars with France, which lasted from 1778 to 1782, when invasion was feared. It may be recalled that the Pitt Press was chiefly erected (1831-3) by means of funds raised for the purpose of erecting a memorial worthy of the distinguished statesman.

Sudden passing of Mrs. Adeane. We deeply regret to record the death of Mrs.C. R.W. Adeane, O.B.E., which occurred suddenly from heart failure at Babraham Hall on Thursday evening of last week. Mrs. Adeane was in Cambridge only a few hours earlier, and almost up to the last carried on her indefatigable work for the many good causes in which she was interested. The deepest sympathy will go out to Ald. Adeane, Lord Lieutenant of the county, and his family in their loss. By her unfailing charm of manner as much is by her ever-ready willingness to help any good cause, Mrs. Adeane had made herself a wide circle of friends, both in the county and elsewhere. And since the beginning of the war particularly, she had rendered unstilted assistance to her husband in helping on the many charitable organisations to which he gave a lead. It was Mrs. Adeane who instituted a fund for the Air Defence Corps. Before the sitting of Linton Court on Wednesday, the chairman (Mr. H. Titmarsh) paid a tribute to the memory of Mrs. Adeane. "Since the court last met," he said, "we have lost a much-loved member. For the last 20 years Mrs. Adeane has served this court with unfailing courtesy." Mr. Titmarsh went on to speak of her wide sympathy and understanding. She had passed on, as she would have wished, with-out any fuss or ostentation; her charming personality was a refreshing memory to them . . . She had left behind her a sense of irreparable loss'.

Enthronement of New Bishop of Ely. With traditional ceremony and piety, the 63rd of a long line of the illustrious prelates to the bee of Ely was formally enthroned yesterday. Clergy and laity from all corners of the diocese, numbering about 2,000, saw the ceremony of the initiation of Dr. H. E. Wynn as the new Bishop. The stately ritual, steeped in centuries-old tradition and splendour, was observed with due solemnity and rite. Waiting at West door with the mandate of induction were the Archdeacon of Canterbury (the Ven. T. K. Sopwith), the Dean of Ely. Archdeacons, residentiary and honorary canons, minor canons and chaplains. At 2.30 the Bishop, attended by his chaplains, knocked three times on the door with his staff and requested enthronement and installation. The oath of allegiance was taken in the choir. Later, kneeling before the High Altar, with the Dean and Archdeacon of Canterbury and Canons kneeling at the steps of the Sanctuary immediately behind the Bishop, the ceremony of enthronement began, and was concluded at the Episcopal Seat. The ancient mandate of the Archbishop of Canterbury was read during the ceremony of installation at the Bishop's stall in the Choir.

Marvellous Escape. — As Mr. L. Curtis, a porter on the L.N.E.R. North station at Huntingdon, was shutting a carriage door of the 12-28 train to London on Saturday, he was caught by the door and dragged under the moving train. The latter was immediately signalled to stop, and it was found that Curtis had escaped with minor injuries and shock. He was removed to the County Hospital, where he regained consciousness, and on Monday he was able to return to his home.

Late Mrs. Wesley Wolfe. Uncle David writes: "In the passing of Mrs. J. Wesley Wolfe, one of Histon's most strenuous social workers has left the scene of earthly activity to sound the mysteries of the beyond. No special occasion presented itself in the village but she was ready and willing to play her part, however strenuous and exhausting that part proved to be, for she seemed to revel in hard work and the overcoming of difficulties; but temperance work, especially amongst children, was her chief concern, and as Secretary of the Methodist Band of Hope for 27 years she was the inspiration of a devoted band of enthusiastic helpers who followed her lead, and the guide and friends of hundreds of children, who, now grown men and women, owe a deep debt of gratitude for the lesson and influences that helped to mould their lives in the impressionable years."

He has also been editor-in-chief of the Press Association. Snacks for Farm Workers. It is hoped to start a temporary canteen at Stapleford for the provision of snacks for harvest workers, to be opened on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. An old lady and a four-year old boy lost their lives when high explosives and incendiary bombs were dropped on an East Anglian town last night. A Sunday School was destroyed and a Chapel and private houses were considerably damaged. The dead are a Mrs Louisa Rowell, aged 82 and John Gilbert Bowles, aged four, both of whom were sleeping in the same house. Mr & Mrs W.E. Bowles, the parents of the lad were injured and have been detained in hospital. A high explosive bomb, which fell outside the Chapel caused damage to the interior. But incendiaries which were dropped were promptly tackled by A.R.P. personnel and neighbours and overcome before they could gain a hold. Mrs. Bell, who was living in the house where the old lady and boy were killed said: "We went to bed as usual, and all, I can remember is being encased in something. I was badly bruised and received abrasions". Mrs. Jones, whose house is nearby told a reporter that she woke up suddenly and heard a terrible explosion. "I nearly fell down the stairs with my child", she added. Next door to a demolished house lives Mr. Webb, who was also asleep in bed when the bombs fell. "My wife shook me up", he said today, “And I heard rubble flying. I got up and had a look out and went back to bed when things quiet down”. We understand. That five other people, Mrs L. Clark, Mr & Mrs A. Petit, Mrs Dorothy Driver and Mrs Florence Bell received attention at hospital for slight injuries but were not detained.

Railwayman's lifetime. A lifetime spend in the service of the railway company is the proud record of Mr. Christopher Cornell, Needingworth Road, St. Ives, who reached the retiring age of 65 years yesterday (Thursday). He started his railway life with the old Great Eastern Company when he was 17 years old, and of 48 years' service, he has spent 44 of them at St. Ives, and has been a signalman for 42 of them. During that time he has served under six stationmasters.

Harvest Horn. Among the "Wanted" advertisements in last week's paper (writes Watchman) was one asking for "domestic bygones," and making special mention of old fire hooks, a farm smock, a harvest horn, articles required for the Old English Museum in Shepreth. A correspondent, himself a collector of antiquities, says it is good to know that such bygones are being sought after and saved from destruction. Smocks and fire hooks are bulky articles not likely to be destroyed, but the harvest horn, a comparatively small instrument, may easily be overlooked, mislaid or cast aside as something of no importance, and perhaps not understood by the average villager today. Years ago in every agricultural village at harvest time, it was customary for a boy to walk slowly through a village, at or shortly before sunrise, and blow a horn as a signal for the labourer to go into the harvest fields. These horns were of simple design and of various sizes, and were sold mainly at Stourbridge Fair. Those in common use in Cambridgeshire were of stout block-tin, 16 "inches in length, straight in shape, and tapering from a quarter of an inch (excluding trumpet-like mouthpiece) to an opening of about 2½ inches in diameter. The last of the horn-blowers in South Cambridgeshire was William King, of Melbourn, who died in December, 1935, aged 84 years. When a lad of about seven years of age (say about 1858) he was chosen to perambulate at sunrise and blow the horn, a harvest-time job he did for several years, his horn notes being heard at times both at Shepreth and Meldreth. 41 08 29 # c.39

Fish Floating on Cam. —- There has been serious mortality of fish in the River Cam below Cambridge, extending at least as far as Bottisham Locks. Large numbers of dead fish have been seen on the surface and on the river bed. Among those taken from the river were a trout of 21b. and some fine specimens of roach, bream, rudd and pike. The mortality appears to have commenced towards the end of last week, and many anglers were disappointed to find fishing out of the question on Sunday. We understand that the Ouse and Cam Fishery Board have made investigations and the matter is under consideration-

A cable was then received by his parents saying he was safe and well, but had lost all his possessions. After the battle of Crete he was reported missing on May 31. Rogers.. .made a wide circle of friends, both young and old, and he was the popular secretary-player of Cottenham United Football Club. He will celebrate his 21st birthday on September 28. Childerley of Other Days. A correspondent's remarks about the Cambs village of Childerley (writes Watchman) have brought me the following very interesting comment by a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, who signs himself "G.H.K." In the 1833 edition of Gorton's Topographical Dictionary, Childerley is given a population of 50. It is stated that 'the church is actually demolished.' Actually, Childerley once possessed two churches, both of which, it is stated, were demolished and the village depopulated, by Sir John Cutts, Bart., at the beginning of the 16th century, for the purpose of forming a deer park. How this high-handed procedure was permitted, as regards the churches, we are not told. Richard Cutts, a squire of Arkesden, inherited the Childerley property about 1670 and was father to General Lord Cutts, author, soldier, and Commander-in-Chief in Ireland, who took part in most of the battles of his day with conspicuous gallantry. His second wife was the daughter of a Cambridgeshire baronet, Sir Henry Pickering, of Whaddon. Childerley Hall stands on the site of the old Cutts' mansion. If the Pickering home exists, it must now be a farmhouse, several of which in Whaddon have attractive architectural features. Referring to another note, this time about Nell Gwyn, my correspondent says: "Nell Gwyn is traditionally associated with old houses at Clavering and Newport and with the Crown House, formerly an inn, on the Newmarket Road at Great Chesterford."

Mayoralty. — At a private meeting on Monday, the Town Council (at Godmanchester) gave a unanimous invitation to the present Mayor (Ald. W. P. Anderson) to continue in office. Tributes were paid to the work of the Mayor and Mayoress by Sir William Prescott; Alderman Pettit and others. The Mayor consented to serve for 1941-2 for a third year.

Oldest Gardener? Who is the oldest gardener in Cambridgeshire? (asks Watchman). Mr. Henry Colgate, of High Street, Slough, who is 92, claims that he is the oldest in Britain. He cultivates a nine-rod allotment, and has a six-rod garden. He cycles to his plot, and puts in an average of seven hours a day among his vegetables. If Cambs. can't equal this, there must, be many veterans who can run it very close. What about it?

The second contains a plan of the memorial chapel to be erected to her memory, and the inscription: "The memorial chapel projected beyond this door by her elder son, Lord Fairhaven, was postponed on the outbreak of war, 1939."

Harvest Supper—New Style. In years gone by the harvest supper. “hawky" or “horkey," was a popular event in the villages of Cambridgeshire, and last Friday the custom was revived—but with a difference (says Watchman). This new-style "horkey" took place at Stapleford, and was organised by the committee of the canteen that has been run there for the harvest workers. It was given to farmers and workers who had patronised the canteen and thus enabled them to get the benefit of the small profit made on the harvest snacks. 41 09 26

Death of Mr. H. H. Sills. Mr. Henry Hebb Sills, Senior Fellow of King's, whose sudden death occurred last week, was the second son of Mr. Thomas Sills, of Sunbrooke House, Ancaster, and a nephew of Mr. H. K. Two years as a master at Uppingham followed, but his college elected him Fellow and appointed him a teacher of Classics. Such he remained throughout his life, with varying offices and examinerships and an eight years' term as Dean (1900-8). As chairman of the Diocesan board of Finance he rendered admirable service for many years.

An elderly woman received fatal injuries when she was run down by an army motorcyclist on Wilburton Road Stretham. A soldier said he was riding in the last lorry of a convoy with the dispatch rider on a solo motorcycle immediately in front. They had just entered Stretham from the direction of Wilburton when he noticed the last vehicle of a convoy going in the opposite direction past the motorcyclist. Mrs Harriet Wheeler who had been waiting to cross the road then stepped out into the highway and was hit by the Dispatch Rider who did his best to avoid her. The speed of the motorcyclist was about 40 miles an hour. Mrs. Rose Asplin, a shopkeeper Wilburton Road told the Coroner the deceased who had been to see her was just about to leave and she told her about the heavy traffic on the road at the time. Deceased remark that she would be careful, and would cross to the other side of the road where there was a footpath. There was only a grass verge on the side where the deceased was then standing. She waited for the last vehicle off a convoy to pass and then ran across the road. But in doing so, she came into collision with an army motorcyclist coming in the opposite direction. The driver who did his utmost to avoid her was flung together with his motorcycle into the ditch by the side of the road. The rider said it was his duty to ride up and down the convoy to see the vehicles kept in close contact with one another. He was riding some distance in front of the last lorry of the convoy when suddenly he saw a woman step from behind the rear vehicle of a convoy going in the opposite direction. He braked hard, but was unable to prevent a collision. PC. Angee said he was called to the scene of the accident and saw skid marks where the motorcycle had braked which proved the driver was well on his correct side.

A verdict of accidental death was recorded. 41 10 08 ES

Gleaning at Willingham. Following upon correspondents' recollections of gleaning in Cambridgeshire, says Watchman, a reader at Willingham writes: "Corn gleaning was the regular thing at Willingham in years gone by. At first they used to go early and stay late, but mothers with large families who needed it could not do that. So it was stopped. No one was allowed to go until the gleaners' bell sounded at seven o'clock, and they had to leave off at five. Different parts of the village went in different parties. The men would sometimes take a field to mow and tie and shock at a price; then the wife and children would help the farmer and would leave a sheaf in the field so the woman had the privilege of the field and other gleaners must keep out. Gleaners would tramp miles sometimes round about, villages, and sit by the roadside until they had done cutting. They would each take something with them at the finish and have a gleaners' tea and a bit of fun in different cottages-" 41 10 10

Diamond wedding.—Mr. and Mrs. T. Tofts, of 12 Malting Cottages, Linton, celebrated the 60th anniversary of their wedding on Monday. She will be 86 in December. The old couple have lived in the same cottage during the whole of their married life, and Mr. Tofts probably set up a record by living in the same row of cottages for 86 years. They have lived a very active life, and Mr. Tofts is still able to "dig for victory" in his garden and his wife to do her own housework.

A disastrous fire broke out on Tuesday at the premises of the Sawston Co-operative Society, Sawston, resulting in extensive damage to the bakery, which was practically gutted. The outbreak was discovered at 11.30, by which time the flames had a good hold on the premises. Adjoining buildings, many of which are largely of timber construction, were at one time threatened, but the prompt arrival of the Sawston Fire Service and the Cambridge Borough Fire Brigade confined the fire to the Co-operative premises. The fire broke out again on Wednesday, necessitating another visit by the firemen. Hoses were played on the smouldering ruins.

A Wonderful Achievement.Well over 3.000 knitted comforts have now been made by members of the Ickleton War Comforts Knitting Party, this wonderful achievement having been done in just under two years. There were also 50 pairs of stockings sent to be lengthened which are not counted in the total. Ickleton is indeed proud of this effort. Knitting was not started until November 20, 1939, as bandages, etc., were not made till then.

A 1798 Chaff-cutter. An aged Fenlander (writes Watchman) has found in the family archives an illustrated account, dated 1798, of a "new" chaff-cutter, one which must have caused some sensation among farmers in general, and farmers' boys in particular, 143 years ago. This particular chaff-cutter was invented by Mr. Robert Salmon, of Woburn, Bedfordshire, and he received for it an award of 30 gns. from the London Society for the Encouragement of Arts. "It is so simple and easy to work," says the booklet describing it," that a boy may cut with it as much as thirty bushels of chaff an hour. And further, it is so simple in construction that any carpenter might, after inspecting it, easily make one." "Oh to be' a farmer's boy," says my correspondent, "and to be expected to cut 30 bushels of chaff in an hour with a huge hand-propelled machine." A description, useless without the heavily-lettered illustration, is too lengthy to be given. Briefly the machine is a cumbersome mixture of cutting-knives, wheels, chains, spiked rollers, levers, counter-balance etc. 41 10 31

"Freeing the Traction Engine".— According to a Waterbeach-born correspondent (says Watchman) today is the 45th anniversary of the repeal of what people were pleased to call the old Red Flag Act. It was on November 14 1896, that traction engines, then largely used for agricultural work, were first allowed on the public roads without a man walking some yards in front and carrying a red flag to warn people of the coming of mechanical transport. Steam engines, used for driving roundabouts and for drawing showmen's vans, were in the same category as traction engines used by farmers, and the man with a red flag was a familiar figure on country roads. It was about eighty years ago that the first steam roundabout appeared at one of the Cambridge fairs, and it is said to have been invented by an engineer James Savage, who lived at King's Lynn. 41 11 14 # c.26.48

Sir Montagu Butler Elected, — The Master of Pembroke, Sir Montagu Butler, was unanimously elected Mayor of Cambridge in succession to Ald. E. O. Brown at the annual meeting of the Town Council on Monday. Proposing his election, Aid. Pollock said few of the Council members would remember the last occasion when the Head of a college—Dr. Pearce —was appointed Mayor. Ald. Pollock recalled that Sir Montagu Butler, unlike some other College Heads who has served on the Council, was educated at Cambridge, taking a brilliant classics degree at Pembroke, at which college he was made a Fellow. He had been President of the Cambridge Union, and was one of four members of three generations of Butlers to hold the office, the others including his son, Mr. R. A. Ely Coroner conducted an inquest on five soldiers who died from burns sustained while on guard on the night of November 11th to 12th. Two others are seriously ill in hospital. Second Lieutenant Shacklady suggested that fire was due to petrol having been thrown on the stove in the guard hut. After the explosion a petrol can was recovered from the hut and he could only think the petrol was obtained from an aeroplane, but there was no evidence to prove that. One of the victim's fathers said: "My protest is that there is not sufficient fuel supply for the stoves. Two other boys were on guard for two hours in the rain and had to go to sleep in the hut in their wet clothes. I suppose they wanted to dry their clothes but not having any coke to burn, which should have been supplied, they put something on the fire to make sufficient heat". Grand National Memories. The sale of the contents of the residence at Warren Close, Royston, yesterday (Thursday) by Messrs. Nash. Son and Rowley, brought together a big company of buyers, and high prices were obtained for many of the lots. The items associated with the famous steeplechaser. Golden Miller, came in for a large amount of attention, and we understand the bronze statue of the horse fetched £10, and the oil painting, by Earl, £69; an additional painting of Insurance, also by Earl, realised £55, and the Trainer's Cup presented for the Grand National victory of 1934 was knocked down for £75. The purchaser in each case was Mr. Mortimer, of Darlington, a former resident of Royston.

The "Old Clay Doot."—A Fenland correspondent (says Watchman) writes: "Clay doot and jill are old Fenland words, but I cannot at the moment trace their origin. My great grandfather (born 1800. died 1897), who was a boy at the time of Waterloo, and remembered the news of the battle coming to Waterbeach, often said he would "now have a cuff or two at my old clay doot," and he also often told me not to 'jill about' (be fidgety)." William Caxton and Caxton, — Telling of the Cambridgeshire village of Caxton, some of the guide books state that it was the birthplace of William Caxton (1422-1491), who first introduced the art of printing into England, and a correspondent interested in the art of printing and of Caxton's work says the statement is entirely erroneous says Watchman. We have Caxton's own authority, says my correspondent, that he. was born in the county of Kent, for he says in the preface of the first, book he printed, and which he translated from the French, the "Recule of the Historyes of Troye": In France was I never, and was born and lerned myne English in Kente in the Weeld, where English is spoken broad and rude". This avowal must therefore be regarded as decisive. A famous Caxtonian was Matthew Paris, who was born in the village, about the year 1195. He became a Benedictine monk of St. Albans, and was one of the most learned men of his time— architect, mathematician, poet, orator and historian. 41 12 19

And my correspondent supplies a list of 15 ages which make 1,071.

Graves in Orchards. Commenting in a London magazine upon the seemingly strange places in which the bodies of human beings have been buried, a writer makes special mention of interments in orchards, and names the Eastern Counties as being the place where once upon a time such burials were by no means unusual (writes Watchman). A Waterbeach born correspondent, in calling attention to the matter says that from the parish register of this village may be found an entry, which reads: "1679, December 10, Francis Wilson excommunicated; buried in his orchard." Villagers under sentence of excommunication (continues my correspondent) were very often not allowed any burial ceremony, and, strictly speaking, could not be interred in the village churchyard.

Joining the police in 1919, he rose to the rank of inspector in April, 1932. He will go to the Newmarket Division, Supt. Charles Barrett and Sgt. Raymond Eric Squire to be inspectors. The latter, who commenced his career in 1921, two years after Mr. Barrett, will take Inspector Housden's place. The promotions will take effect on January 1 next

Death of Mr H.B. Hart. Cambs Cricket Club lost a valuable old servant and one of its most active members by the death of Mr Harold B. Hart, of Manor Farm Hauxton. Mr. Hart, who died on Monday at the age of 54, had been in failing health for some time. He first played cricket for Cambs in 1913, and continued till 1935. Elected joint secretary in 1920, he was also appointed captain in 1927 and for some seasons combined these offices. He worked exceptionally hard in the lean period following the resumption of cricket after the last war, and had the satisfaction of seeing these energetic efforts rewarded by the building up of a useful side. A fine batsman I his younger days, he also played for Camden and Royston. He was also associated for many years with Royston Town Football Club of which he was captain, and earned a big reputation as a centre-half. Mr Hart had been at Manor Farm for about three years. Before that he lived for 19 years at Harston, where he was bailiff to the late Sir Charles Walston

Cambridgeshire Regt. - The Question of the origin of the Cambridgeshires (writes Watchman) is again being discussed in certain quarters and there seems to be a belief, according to a correspondent, that the regiment was first formed in 1914 at the commencement of the First Great War. It was then thought to be new, but it may be recalled that Mr. Hubert O. S. Ellis, of Melbourn, wrote to the Press during September, 1914, giving a brief history of the regiment. Mr. Ellis (whose father was born in the barracks in the island of St. Helena in the year 1818) stated that the 18th Regiment of Foot was known as the "Cambridgeshire;" it was at Waterloo, besides being in Egypt and the Peninsula Wars; facings were yellow and lace silver. The grandfather of Mr. Ellis, Capt. John, Hitch Ellis, who received his commission as Ensign in the Cambridgeshire Regiment (30th Foot) in 1803, and eventually Joined the 66th Foot (the "Berkshire"),

Presentation to Retiring Head Teacher - Mr. H. Appleyard, late head teacher of Bassingbourn Council School, has been obliged to retire from his post owing to continued ill health. At the close of the Christmas term a testimonial was presented to him in recognition of his services during the past seven years. Several friends spoke of Mr. Appleyard's good services to the school and of his social work in the village. An album artistically inscribed by Miss Waddelow, with the names of upwards of 250 subscribers was presented to Mr. Appleyard, together with a cheque for £50 as a token of sympathy and good wishes for Mr. and Mrs. Appleyard. Of this sum £4 9s. 1d. was raised by the schoolchildren 42 01 09

Death of Q.M.S. Hopkins.—The sad news was received this week by Mr. and Mrs. William Hopkins, of 33 Oakington Road (Cottenham) that their youngest son, Quarter-master Sergeant Reginald Hopkins, who has been serving in India with H.M, Forces, passed away on January 7, after contracting fever. Quartermaster Sergeant Hopkins, who was 25 years of age, enlisted in the Army 10 years ago; he has served seven years in India. Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins have two other sons serving in the forces.

Three preachers at Oakington. A recent note of mine (says Watchman) has brought me the following interesting letter from Mr. H. Young, 5 Rampton Road, Cottenham.—"I was interested to read your account of a burial in an orchard at Waterbeach. At Oakington three Nonconformist preachers were buried in a garden near the parish church. They were the Revs. F. Holcroft, died 1692; Joseph Oddy, died 1697 and Henry Oasland, died 1711. Can any reader remember the date of the great Commemoration Festival held in a field, belonging to a Mr. Morris, to do honour to the memory of these three Nonconformist preachers? Dr. Green of Cambridge presided; the speakers were the Revs. J. C. Wells, of Cottenham; Flanders of Swavesey; King of Gransden; Neal of Waterbeach; Parish of Cottenham; Shaw of Over; and Mr. J. Smith, of Willingham, I have in my possession a book giving an account of the day's proceedings, and it would be interesting to know how many years ago this was. More than 2,000 people are said to have been present"

Escape at Second Attempt. - In September, 1940, we reported that Gunner E. Dimes, an old Duxford man, was a prisoner, and subsequently his wife received notification that from the authorities that they were unable to trace him and so he was reported "missing." However, in actual fact, Gunner Dimes was in a German prison camp, where he attempted to escape, but was captured and punished. With typical British tenacity he "tried again" and this time was successful. As a result, Gunner Dimes is now spending a well-earned leave at his home at 131 Station Road, Histon. Before the war he was a mail van driver, at Royston Post Office, but, being a reservist, was called to the Colours at the outbreak of hostilities. He would not tell of the conditions in a prison camp, nor of his escape, but when questioned as to what the food was like, said "Not so good."

Death of Mr "Bert" Grimwood, — A well-known Cambridgeshire sportsman died after a short illness at Huntingdon in the person of Mr. Herbert Grimwood, known to the Eastern Counties cycling world as "Bert." He was 39. Chiefly known as a cyclist, he was one of the founders of the Histon Wheelers Cycling Club, and at one period its secretary. Several times he figured in the winning team in the Eastern Counties team championship and shield. He was well-known at all sports meetings in the Eastern and Home Counties and was the winner of many prizes and medals. He was a prominent member of the Cambridge Town and County Cycling Club and of the Huntingdon Town and County Cycling Club and also a timekeeper and official. He was the joint holder of the 25 miles tandem record of the Cambridge Town and County C.C. and held several records of the Histon Wheelers C.C. He was also the holder of the ten miles Eastern Counties N.C.U. championship. After his business took him to Huntingdon, it occupied most of his time, but he always spared time to assist at races and record attempts, and in recent years a spell of fishing often occupied his leisure hours. He had been employed by Messrs. Chivers and Son since he was 15.

Where the petrol goes. All over the Eastern Area retailers are getting together to formulate delivery pooling schemes to save petrol and manpower (writes Watchman,). And not without reason, apparently, judging from the following comment from a correspondent in a Cambridgeshire village: "Our lane has nine houses and a community of about a score of bodies; yet we are visited week by week by four butchers' vans, two bakers, three milkmen, four coalmen, and other odds and ends. Time a little co-ordination was adopted, eh?"

Death of Mr. W. Clarke, — Mr. Wm Clarke passed peacefully sway at his residence, The Farm, Swaffham Prior, on January 29, aged 84 years. He had enjoyed health up to only a few days before the end. He leaves two sons, Mr. W. T. Clarke and Mr J.W. Clarke of Swaffham Prior and one daughter, Mrs R.C. Chinery of Bury St. Edmunds. Mr. Clarke had farmed all his life, and before his retirement a few years ago farmed extensively at Swaffham Prior, Burwell and Kirtling. He also carried on a considerable business as a straw merchant, and for over 60 years supplied trainers with this commodity, his early patrons being Matt Dawson, Fred and Charlie Archer, Dick Marsh and a host of others, leading up to the present day. He was a well-known figure in Newmarket, and his fondness for tile town led him to choose it as his resting place, the internment taking place at Newmarket cemetery yesterday (Thursday) afternoon.

Bell-ringer's Death. Many friends in Cambridge and throughout the Eastern Counties will learn with regret of the death, at his home in Union Lane, Chesterton, early on Wednesday morning of Mr. Walter Eusden, known for over three score years as one of the foremost bellringers in East Anglia. Eighty-two years of age, he had earned for himself by his unique knowledge of bells a reputation that was second to none. For 61 year of his life, he was bellringer at St. Andrew's Church, Old Chesterton, where perhaps his loss will be most felt. It was his hands that helped to toll the bells of Great St. Mary's, where for over 30 years he rang for countless famous occasions and events. Naturally, the curtailment of bellringing at the outbreak of war robbed him of his greatest interest in life. It was his ardent wish that he might ring for his diamond wedding, which he celebrated about 18 months ago. On one occasion, that of the Diamond Jubilee of Queen Victoria, he rang no fewer than 5,042 changes on the bells of St Andrew's, Old Chesterton, and a tablet in the left aisle can be seen commemorating this. One of his greatest performances was to ring the first peals on the bells of the Roman Catholic Church, where also a tablet, this time in the bell tower, can be seen recalling the event. One of the most remarkable things about Mr. Eusden was that although he suffered from extreme deafness, he could tell exactly when any one bell was not striking correctly by the pull of the rope alone. He was also a great handbill ringer # c.69.6

A Thirsty Town—A sound financial position was revealed at the ordinary general meeting of the Cambridge University and Town Waterworks Company, which was held on Friday at the company's offices at Bene't Street. Reference was also made to the increased consumption of water and to the fact that the pumping plant used coal, which was required for war production, so that economy in the use of water was still necessary.

Firemen go 1¾ miles for water— A fifty-ton stack of baled wheat straw caught fire on Friday at Great Wilbraham. Units of the Cambridge N.F.S, attended, and water had to be relayed for 1¾ miles. The fire started at about 1.45 p.m., but the N.F.S. was not notified until the evening. A tractor near the stack was damaged.

Killed In the Far East - It is announced that twowell-known officers, with strong Cambridgeshire associations, have been killed in action in the Far East. They are Lt. Hugh Chivers of Wisbech, and Capt. Robin Cutlack, only son of Col.W. P. Cutlack, Zone Commander of the Isle of Ely Home Guard, chairman of the Cambs, Isle of Ely Territorial Army Association, a former High Sheriff and a former Commanding Officer of the County Regiment. He was also the grandson of the "G.O.M." of Ely, Mr. William Cutlack, a former Chairman of the Isle of Ely County Council and also a former High Sheriff. Robin Cutlack, who spent his boyhood in Cambridge and played cricket for St. Giles in the holidays, was one of those people who had a most stimulating effect upon all whom he came into contact. Apart from his efficiency, this characteristic no doubt contributed to his quick promotion, which was due to merit, not to the fact that he was the son of an old C.O.—a fact probably unknown to his recent Commanding officers. Like his father, he was up at Pembroke. Lt. Hugh J, Chivers was the son of Mr. A. J. Chivers, who was for many years well-known in Cambridge as a member of the staff of first Foster's and then Lloyds Bank. Hugh's two uncles, the late Mr. Fred Chivers, of Cottenham and Mr. Jim Chivers of Willingham are well-known names in a wide circle. Lt. Chivers was thus steeped in Cambridgeshire traditions. After leaving school he took to banking as a profession, and just as his father before him had done, he devoted all his energies to his vocation. When the war clouds were gathering he was back in his father's old branch at Wisbech. During the recruiting "Sweep" he joined the ranks of the Fen Tigers, and it was a very short time before he was given a commission.

Much of the mystery which the tank - Britain's secret weapon of the last war - still holds for a good number of people is explained by the Ministry of Information exhibition which opens at the Central Library, Cambridge. Photographs, scale models, diagrams, drawings and explanatory text throw an interesting bite on the many technicalities, present a complete record of the evolution of the tank from scrap metal heap to fighting line, and explain the vast array of mobile facilities which make up a British armoured division. Briefly the exhibition is a sterling record of Britain's tremendous effort to beat the Axis Powers in the production of this most vital weapon of war. Two points stand out from a mass of detail: the fact that Britain still builds the best tanks. The second - and the most important of all - is that we still need immense numbers. Only now after two years of war are we catching up with the enemy strength– 42 02 21c, d

Shelford House Gutted. A spark from a chimney falling on to the thatched roof on Friday evening started a fire which caused extensive damage to the Old, Enclosure, a house in Newton Road, Little Shelford. There was no loss of life. The occupier is Mr, F. Bagnell, who lived at the house with his two sisters. Mr. Bagnell was alone in the house at about 8 p.m. when a neighbour came to the door and told him a chimney was on fire. Once ignited, the Norfolk blazed fiercely and Mr. Bagnell's efforts to control the flames with stirrup pump and chemical extinguisher were ineffectual, and the Fire Services were called. The fire was brought under control by ten o'clock. Nevertheless, the roof and. most of the interior were completely burnt out, and a large part of the furniture and other property were destroyed. In the house was a very valuable gold watch and chain belonging to Mr. Bagnell, which have not yet been recovered.

Ninety Last Monday, — Mr. Wm. Cutlack of Cambridge Road, Ely, reached the age of 90 last Monday (writes Watchman). In local government he has played a prominent part, and he was known as "father" of the County Council. As a young man Mr, Cutlack became associated, with the brewery established at Waterside, Ely, by the late Mr. Frank Harlock, and which today trades under the name of Hall, Cutlack and Harlock. He is a native of Littleport and was one of the original members of the Isle County Council, having attended the first meeting when the council came into being in 1889. In 1931 he was made an Alderman and in that year he presented to the Council the official arms of the county. Ald. Cutlack was presented with an illuminated transcript of the minutes as testimony of the esteem and regard which the Aldermen and Councillors entertained for the high character and faithful service, which, as administrator and High Sheriff, he had rendered to the county during a period of 40 years. For 14 years he served on the Ely Urban District Council and from 1913 to 1918 he occupied the chair,

Increase in indictable Offences. - Increases both in indictable offences and accidents during 1941 were reported by the Chief Constable of Cambridgeshire (Mr. W. H. Edwards) to the meeting of the Cambs, Standing Joint Committee on Saturday. During the year 362 indictable offences were reported to the police, 238 of which were detected. The number of offences .was 199 more than in the previous year, which the Chief Constable attributed, to war-time conditions, facilitation in commission afforded by black-out conditions, the diversion of regular police officers from their normal duties, and the large increase in population, due to evacuation. The amount of property stolen or damaged during 1941 was £1,933 10s. 7d and that capable of being recovered £1,634 18s. 0d. Accidents reported during the year totalled 660, as the result of which 38 persons lost their lives and 469 persons were injured. The corresponding figures for 1940 were 534 accidents, 37 persons killed and 414 injured.

Missing in Malaya.—Many Cambridgeshire families have received this week official intimation concerning husbands and sons who were serving in Malaya up to the fall of Singapore. In all cases the notification has stated that there is at present no news of the man concerned, and for the time it is necessary to post him as "missing." Most of the official notices concern men serving with the Royal Engineers, and amongst these are two brothers, Sergeant William Turkentine and Sapper Allan Turkentine, sons of Mr. and Mrs. A. C, Turkentine of 34 Albert Street, Cambridge. # c.45.7

New High Sheriff. The new High Sheriff for Cambridgeshire for 1942, appointed by the King in Council, is Mr. Roger H. Parker, M.A., M.C. of Thorneycreek, Herschel Road, Cambridge. A director and local director of Barclays Bank, Mr. Parker was educated a Eton and Trinity. During the last war he served with the 5th (P.C.W.) Dragoon Guards, and was awarded the Military Cross. His interest in Addenbrooke's Hospital, of whose General Committee he is chairman, is well-known, whilst his county associations include the Joint Mastership of the Cambridgeshire Hunt, his work for Trumpington No.2 electoral division and a deputy lieutenant-ship. As commander of the 4th Battalion of the Cambridgeshire Home Guard, he holds the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Daring Rescue. The British Empire Medal (civil division) has been conferred on Mr Frederick Bertram Pearson farmer, of Westwick Hall Farm, Oakington, for the courage and determination he showed in saving the lives of two airmen when their machine crashed and caught fire. The plane, which was "bombed up", narrowly missed Mr Pearson's house, crashed through his garden and landed in an adjoining field, where it burst into flames. Rushing to the spot Mr. .Pearson found one man trying to pull another more seriously injured from the burning wreck. With great coolness, Mr. Pearson cut of the harness of the badly injured man and carried him clear of the flames on his back, giving a hand to the other man at the same time. While he was doing this the heat was discharging bullets and the bombs were liable to explode. Two horticultural workers from Oakington, Wilfrid Josiah Brickwood and Edward Jabez Smith, have also received commendations for their share in the rescue. # c.45.7 # c.26.1

Missing Since Singapore.—Many families in Cambridge and County have received official notification concerning local men of the Cambridgeshires and other regiments, who, following the fall of Singapore, must for the present be posted as missing. A list of men from the County (33) is given below. # c.45.7

Blacksmith's Death.—Swavesey and the surrounding district have lost a well-known personality by the death of Mr. Millice Charles Culpin, blacksmith, who passed away in Addenbrooke's Hospital aged 76 years. A son of the late Mr. M. C. Culpin, blacksmith, of St. Ives, as a young man he served in the Army and subsequently took over the blacksmith's and shoeing smith's business at Conington, Cambs. Thirty-seven years ago he removed to Swavesey. He had been in failing health for some time. 42 04 10

Senior Schools. I see (writes Watchman) that Mr. R. A. Butler, President of the Board of Education, and M.P. for the Saffron Walden Division, has been championing the senior council schools —and having a word to say about false criteria. Speaking at Frome in Somerset, this week, he said that senior council schools yield nothing to many secondary schools in training practical citizens. "We should get rid of the misguided idea that the School Certificate is the goal in an educational race," he added. "This is due to mistaken values—the result of excess, competition for jobs, and a false criterion for deciding who is qualified for the job."

First News after Singapore. News from a member of the Cambridgeshires who was at Singapore when it fell on February 15 reached Cambridge on Saturday. Mrs. Bagstaff, of 107 Suez Road, received an airgraph letter dated March 7 from her husband, C.S.M. Bagstaft, of the 2nd Battalion, now in hospital at Karachi. In the mistaken belief that she might have received the worst news, he says: "'I first of all wish to tell you to ignore the cable saying that 1 am 'missing, believed killed'. As you can see, I am safe, and although in hospital, am reasonably well." Other extracts from the letter are: "I have not been wounded, but was the victim of shell-shock." I have almost recovered now, but am deaf in my left ear. I lost every item of kit that I had in Singapore and Malaya. Please do not worry. The names and photographs of more than 70 local men missing after the Singapore episode are published. # c.45.7

Guard of Honour, — There was a guard of honour for Sapper V. A. Hagland, of London, and his Impington bride, Miss I. Meredith, of 19 College Road, after their wedding in the village- on Saturday. The bridegroom was photographed while being greeted by his father, Mr. Wm, Hagland, who, though now retired, was once the oldest driver on the L.N.E.R. He has had a notable career.

Starting as a van boy in 1880, he qualified as a driver, and had the “Aberdonian" and other famous expresses in his charge. Mr. Hagland was twice on television, and has also appeared in the "In Town Tonight" programme on radio. He has 14 living children and 24 grandchildren.

Death of Major-General. The death occurred suddenly at Melbourn on Tuesday of Maj.-Gen. He was a great supporter of the British Legion, from the branch county and area points of view. He was the first President of the Melbourn branch, and later became President of the Bassingbourn and District branch. 42 05 01

Resignation of Ald, Adeane, — The resignation of Mr. C. R. W. Adeane from the office of Alderman, which the County Council are to receive tomorrow - with, it goes without saying, a great deal of regret — will terminate many years of useful and much valued service in local government affairs. Mr. Adeane, who was born in 1863, first joined the council in 1892, serving for a period of three years. There was a break until 1904, when he again became a member, so he can look back upon an association of altogether 40 years with the county administration (says Watchman). And for many of these years he has graced the aldermanic bench. As Lord Lieutenant .for the County, Mr. Adeane has brought to the office a dignity that has at all times befitted such a distinguished personage. He suffered a severe blow by the sudden death some months ago of Mrs. Adeane

Prisoners. Cambridgeshire relatives of men missing in Malaya will be interested in an, extract from a letter passed on to us by Dr. Haynes. It was received by his daughter, Mrs, Stallard, wife of Captain F. H. Stallard, chaplain to the Beds and Herts Regt., who himself was posted as missing after the fall of Singapore. The letter which was written by a lady friend living in Northampton included the following: "An officer of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders escaped and a friend of ours has just seen him. He says the prisoners in Singapore are well treated, on the whole and that the Japanese General in charge of them is a Christian Churchman — a Roman Catholic -~ who was educated at Oxford. I do think the fact they are in charge of a Christian General, with an English education, does make an enormous difference to our anxiety and I hope you will find strong hope in it." — Several more local men have been posted missing following the fall of Singapore,

"Invasion" Test. Cambridge is to be the centre of an important "invasion" exercise this weekend. The public, however, unlike the recent exercise at Plymouth—are not to take a direct part in the exercise, which will last from 8.30p.m. on Saturday to 11 a.m. on Sunday. The "picture" of the exercise is that invasion by the enemy is presumed to have started and that enemy forces are approaching Cambridge. Such an attack would carry heavy air raids on Cambridge itself. Military and Home Guards are taking part in attack and defence, and members of the Civil Defence Services in Cambridge and Cambridgeshire will be actively participating. The public are warned that in the course of the night there will probably be "unusual sounds," with "bombing," and planes may be used. # c.45.7

Bombs on village.—Bombs were dropped on an East Anglian village on Tuesday night. They caused no damage, however, except to fowls, and most of the damage was confined to poultry houses. It is thought that only one raider was concerned.

Prisoners at Singapore, — An interesting reference to the treatment of prisoners in Singapore is contained in a letter which Mrs. E. J. Harper, of 28 Abbey Walk, Cambridge, has received from Mrs. Pringle, mother of Lieut. Alastair Pringle, of the Royal Engineers, who was taken prisoner at the same lime as Major Harper. After expressing pleasure that her son has the company of Major Harper, Mrs Pringle goes on: "Now I have good news to give you. I had a setter from Ted Furse's mother this week, and she has had word from the father of a man who escaped twelve days after the fall of Singapore that the prisoners were being well treated up to the day he left and that all were at work repairing the damage that had been done. It is a blessing that they have got something to pass the time. How they will each react to this captivity I do not know, and we must just hope for the best. It is very comforting in the meantime to have this news." X"

Stationmaster. Railway passengers and others in the Royston area (says Watchman) will learn with interest of a staff change involving a popular railway official. He is Mr. George Green, who has been well-known in the town as Chief Clerk at the local station, and who has now been appointed Stationmaster at Meldreth and Melbourn. In the last war he lost a leg at Builecourt; but this handicap did not damp his enthusiasm upon the formation of the Home Guard in the town, and he became one of the original local members, And he is now Company Sergeant Major- testimony not only to his keenness, but to the recognition in higher quarters of his useful mi1itary experience. 42 05 29

Jack Hobbs to the Rescue. There is a strong likelihood that in the near future the boys of Chesterton Senior School will have a matting cricket pitch in place of the existing turf one. This step was provisionally decided upon at a meeting of the Cambridge Borough Education Committee in the Guildhall on Tuesday. The alteration was suggested by Coun. E. H. Church, who explained that: he had recently accompanied Jack Hobbs to the present pitch in the school grounds. There, he added, Mr. Hobbs had expressed the opinion that, it was impossible for the boys to play cricket, and for them even to get the pitch into a playing condition: The turf was full of weeds, and to get a good pitch would mean a complete re-turfing. The only solution was that some matting be laid down at the cost of about £10. Coun. G. Wilding expressed his agreement with the suggestion. It was agreed that the matter be left to the Education Officer for him to have the work carried out if he found it advisable.

King and Queen Tour Fens. Their Majesties the King and Queen on Saturday paid a visit to reclaimed fen land in Cambridgeshire, and saw for themselves the magnificent work that is being carried out by the Cambs War Agricultural Executive on the vital food front. Indeed the whole five thousand acres at Swaffham Prior Fen and Adventurers Fen, Burwell is nothing more nor less than a battlefield where men and women, armed with the latest weapons of agriculture, are carrying out relentless warfare against rushes, scrub, bog oaks and flooding. Considerably more than half the 5,000 acres was derelict in 1939; the remainder produced only moderate crops . . . During their visit their Majesties travelled over miles of new concrete roads through Reach to Adventurers Fen, Burwell where they embarked on barges at Cock Up Bridge on Burwell Lode, which runs through artificial banks above the level of the fen. While the barges were sailing down the Lode demonstrations of blasting bog oaks by explosives were given,

Boy Drowned. A boy, aged 9, was drowned in the river at Huntingdon on Wednesday evening. He was bathing with other boys near the railway bridge at Castle Hill. He apparently got out of his depth. The police, under the direction of Sgt. Gilbert, dragged the river until nearly midnight but up to then the body had not been recovered.

18,000 miles. A correspondent (Says Watchman), writing of the Cambridge Independent Press, says: An old lady, in pre-war days, bought a copy of the "Independent" ' every week, and after reading it she loaned it to four neighbours. Later on the paper was sent to a son in Newcastle, who then forwarded it to a brother at Plymouth. From Plymouth it went to a brother in Melbourne, in Australia, who then sent it to a brother in Canada. The itinerary or programme was carried out weekly for several years, and according to the correspondent, each copy of the "Independent" must have travelled quite 18.000 miles. 42 06 26 # c.04

Mentioned In dispatches. In the King's Birthday Honours List in the London Gazette, June 11, Sgt. F. G. Wisbey, R.A.F.V.R., (Arlington)., was mentioned in dispatches. He joined the R.A.F.V.R. in February. 1939, and was called up when the war broke out.

Col. Henry William Hurrell, J.P, D.L., Alderman of the Cambridgeshire County Council, Vice-Chairman of the Cambridge County Quarter Sessions and Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee. Col. Hurrell was a member of a well-known county family, who for several generations have been connected as landowners and occupiers in the parishes of Newton, Harston, Madingley and Great Shelford. His father, the late Mr. Henry Hurrell, was a former occupant of Madingley Hall, where Col. Harding now resides. Col. Hurrell was born in 1857.

Second son to fall. Much sympathy is felt for Mr. and Mrs Carse, of 5 David Street, Cambridge, who have recently received news that their second son, Gunner Arthur George Carse, of the Royal Garrison Artillery, has been killed in action. It is only about two months ago that another son, Sapper H. Carse, was killed. Gunner Carse had been in the Army about eight years, and had served in India for four years. When war broke out he volunteered for the Front, and went about 18 months ago. He was 26 years of age, and before he joined the Army was at Messrs, Robert Sayle's St Andrew's Street.

The "Queen," elected by the vote of her fellow pupils, was Valerie Spicer (Pampisford), and she was followed to the throne by four girls who had had the honour in previous years, Joan Knight, Joan Bradford, Ruby Searle and Nina Cromack. The ceremony was performed by Mrs. H. Gage Spicer in the presence of a very large company of parents and friends of the children.

Demonstrations of physical training and country and maypole dancing were followed by an exhibition of art needlework, metalwork, woodwork and cookery.

Home Guard Parade. Thousands of Cambridge people thronged the edge of Parker's Piece on Sunday to give testimony to the already recognised belief that there is nothing that draws the Englishman's attention like a military parade. The occasion proved not only the greatest event of its type we have seen in the town since the outbreak of war but, in addition, constituted — and not altogether unexpectedly — an achievement on the part of the local Home Guard that all may be proud of. Home Guardsmen, numbering 3,500, came from all over the county to take part, and to be inspected by Lieutenant-General K. A. N. Anderson. The military arrangements of the parade and march past were carried out by the Commander, Cambridge Sub-Area, and staff. # c.45.7

Married 50 years. Mr. and Mrs. T. Fuller, of 6 David Street, Cambridge, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on Thursday. They were married at St. John's Church, Littleport, on July 7, 1892, Mrs. Fuller being a native of that Isle village and Mr. Fuller of Soham. He is 74 years of age and his wife 70. He was a bricklayer by trade, and they came to Cambridge when the New Theatre was being built, Mr. Fuller working on the job. They were members of the Salvation Army for 40 years, and Mr. Fuller has been a member of the Brotherhood for 20 years. Having retired, Mr. Fuller now makes gardening his hobby, and both attend the Mill Road Baptist Church. They have had two sons and three daughters, and have eight grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Youngest Inspector.—At the age of 36 Leonard Arthur Unwin becomes the youngest inspector in the Cambridgeshire County Constabulary. The promotion took place as from the first of this month.

Inspector Unwin joined the force in 1927, and was given the rank of sergeant in 1938. He has been stationed at Melbourn. Bourn, Girton and Madingley and is at present out at Newmarket. He is one of the most earnest supporters of sporting activities in the Force, and is a member of the cricket eleven. He is secretary of the recreation club.

Group Captain Barwell Dead. — On the day after his 36th birthday. Group Captain Philip Reginald Barwell D.F.C. has been killed during an operational flight over the South Coast. A Swavesey man, Group Captain Barwell was, at the time of his appointment, the youngest of his rank in the R.A.F. Educated at Wellingborough, where he captained the Bisley eight, he obtained a short service commission in 1925. It was seven years later that his permanent commission was granted. As a fighter-pilot commanding his Squadron, he was awarded his D.F.C., and it is interesting to recall that the operational section which he commanded at the time of his death had more enemy machines to its credit than any other in Fighter Command. On June 22 this year he stood godfather to the daughter of his youngest brother, Squadron Leader E. G. Barwell. D-F.C. at Boxworth Church. 42 07 17

From Cowpuncher to Prebendary. F.A. Cardew who was buried in Little Willingham churchyard last week, had an adventurous life. In his youth he was a cowpuncher in Canada, and later became a bush parson in Queensland. It was as Chaplain of St. George's English Church in Paris that he won fame. Serving in this capacity for 27 years, he did much for the English-speaking people in general and especially for the stage community. There were floral tributes from the Actors' Church Union and the Theatre Girls' Club. The British and French Governments recognised Mr. Cardew's work by making him an O.B.E. and Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. He had been a Prebendary of St. Paul's since 1931. Prebendary Cardew married a daughter of the late Canon H. P. and Mrs. Stokes, and it was near the family grave that he was buried. Mrs Cardew and members of the family, together with several parishioners, were present.

Death of Dr. F.L. Nicholls. The news of the death of Dr. Frederick Lucius Nicholls, O.B.E., on Thursday of last week, came as a great shock to the village of Fulbourn and to a wide circle of friends, colleagues and admirers in the county and still further afield. For nearly 55 years Dr. Nicholls had practised in Fulbourn and the neighbouring villages, and his skill, kindliness and ever-present sense of public duty endeared him to all with whom he came into contact. Some of the older residents will remember him many years ago, when he was to be seen on horseback visiting his patients, and will have seen him riding up to the doors, and, whilst still in the saddle, knock with his riding whip, and often prescribe by the road-side; and now that he has passed on, his generosity of heart can recorded with gratitude, for many families have benefited by his care and attention, but never received a bill for his professional service. He refused to be enrolled as panel practitioner, preferring to retain the old family doctor tradition, but he was always ready respond to all appeals for his services. During the last war successfully conducted a hospital in the village without any remuneration, and for which he received the O.B.E. in the post-war honours list. During these years of national difficulty he made it a rule never to make any charge for professional services to any members of servicemen's families # c.21.1

Recent raid damage at Cambridge: bombs on Union Society; debating hall escapes; flying at less than a hundred feet and in full view of many people a German raider dropped HE and incendiary bombs. Main damage was done to the library, writing room, committee room and the lounge. Masonry which was flung about by the explosion burst through the roofs and all the windows at the front of the premises and overlooking Round Church Street were blown out. The debating hall was only very slightly damaged and that mostly by water. The end of the library received a direct hit from a small high explosive bomb and several fire bombs but the steel stacks in which the books were housed saved them from the effect of the blast. The collection of music books were lost. One stained glass window of the Round Church was blown in, otherwise the church escaped – 42 08 01, 42 08 01a [raid was July 23rd] # c.45.5 # c.36.92

Sharp attack on East Anglian town, few casualties; fire guards prove their worth; the most intensive raid, only four people slightly hurt. A few HE landed on open ground where they did not damage except to one cow that had to be destroyed. Many houses sustained direct hits from incendiaries but fire parties had the flames under control and NFS pumps were soon in action. Mr Story said he had just taken his young child from its cot when an incendiary crashed through the rafters and on to the empty cot. In another outlying part a 'bread-basket' of incendiaries fell in the road and damage by blast was caused to shop premises. Incendiaries were also scattered over other streets and little piles of sand testify to the efforts of the fireguards. Here and there a hole could be seen in the rafters of houses where bombs had scored direct hits. Charred window frames and little piles of scorched furniture outside were further evidence. One air raid warden returned home to find the house adjacent to his had been almost completely destroyed by fire. The new phosperous bombs were also dropped. The Special's Matchbox.—Here (writes Watchman) is the story of a well-known. Special Constabulary Inspector of the St. Ives Division. Last week he transferred a number of Treasury notes for safety from a worn-out wallet to an empty match-box. Later he sought to light his briar, and threw the empty matchbox into the police station grate. Some time afterwards he remembered and quickly made his way to the station, to be informed that all the rubbish had been put into the stove. He has now to thank "summer time" for a recovery of his money, which is still kept in the matchbox. Whispers among the specials may mean that a new wallet will be soon on the way.

Drumhead Service. A striking example of the volunteer spirit of the citizens of Britain was provided on Parker's Piece on Sunday afternoon, when members of Cambridge's many voluntary services paraded for a drumhead service. Volunteers all were assembled from the contingent of the Old Contemptibles, who kept the British flag flying in the early days of the last war, to the youths of the A.T.C, who will keep Britain's planes flying in the later days of this. A further venture of the Cambridge Borough Entertainments Committee the proof of its overwhelming success, was provided by the huge and enthralled crowd which thronged the Piece. It is estimated that parade and spectators numbered somewhere between 4,000 and 5,000. Alter the service there was a march-past by all the units on parade, the salute being taken by the County Member (Capt. R. G. Briscoe, M.C.). # c.45.7

Duke of Kent. The tragic death of the Duke of Kent will be felt no less in Cambridgeshire than in other parts of the country, for his visits to this area over a period of years won him many admirers among the people here (writes Watchman). And so, on account of this personal regard and because the Royal Family's sympathy has readily gone out to all similarly bereaved, we shall offer in our hearts, if not in actual words, our condolences to the King and Queen and the Duchess. They will be sustained, one feels, by the knowledge that the Duke shares with thousands of others the honour of having met his death in the course of duty for his country.

Death of Solicitor. Many people in Cambridge will learn with regret of the death of Mr. H. F. Shaw, which occurred on Sunday after a long illness, at his home at 54, Lensfield Road. A well-known and much respected figure, Mr. Shaw had practised as a solicitor in the town since just after the last war. He was 50 years of age. During the last war he lost the sight of an eye while serving in the 12th

Suffolk Regiment, and very shortly afterwards came up to Christ's College to study law. He took his M.A. and Ll.B. degrees and studied practical law for some time under Mr. Guy Stanley. Later he became a partner in the firm, and for the past 18 month, since the retirement of Mr. Stanley, had been in sole charge. In 1936 he was appointed Clerk to the Cambridge County Petty Sessions at the Shire Hail. In the Borough he was a frequent prosecutor for the police, and also instructed many counsel for the Crown at Assizes

In 1922, Lord Eltisley (then Sir Douglas Newton) defeated the Liberal and Labour candidates in a three-cornered light and was returned as Conservative M.P for Cambridge, which he served in that capacity until 1934 when he was raised to the peerage. He was a former Vice-Chairman and later Chairman of the Cambridgeshire County Council. In 1917 he was created a K.B.E. A famous agriculturist, he held various important posts in this sphere. He controlled, with the aid of his farm manager, 2,000 acres at Croxton Park.

Cadets' Parade. As Dickens once observed, a military parade is "indeed a beautiful and noble .sight" and Sunday's Army Cadet rally at Ely provided striking evidence of the truth. The cadets, nearly 1.200 of them, came from all over the county for the parade, which was one of the largest of its kind that England has ever ever seen. An added point of interest was the fact that among the interested spectators at the march was none other than the young monarch of Yugoslavia, King Peter, who was celebrating his 19th birthday. Preceding the inspection by Major-General Viscount Bridgeman, chairman of the British National Cadet Association on the Paradise ground, the battalions attended divine service, held appropriately enough in Ely Cathedral, within whose precincts he met the fighting men of generations. The Dean of Ely, the Very Rev. L. E. Blackburne, conducted the service, the congregation filling the whole of the great cathedral

Eight people were killed and two are missing as the result of a British plane crashing in the middle of the village of Somersham last night. Six cottages were wrecked and a number of others damaged. The plane was in difficulty and the crew baled out and landed safely. There was a tremendous blaze visible for miles which was fought by N.F.S. formations. The local Home Guard did good work in rescuing trapped people and recovering bodies from the debris. They were helped later by soldiers and airmen. Mr E.C. Norman, a sergeant in the special police told a reporter: "O heard a plane revving overhead rather peculiarly. I went out and saw two planes flying around with a sort of halo round them, and took them to be on fire. One appeared to dive and then climbed and went out of sight. Shortly afterwards I saw the other plane flying at great speed in a southerly direction. It crashed into the houses in the village street and burst into a mass of flames". The plane took the roof off one house in Rectory Lane but the occupants of the house, who were downstairs, were not hurt. The plane then went straight through the house occupied by Mr Lamb and his mother on the opposite side of the street. Some of the premises damaged were thatched cottages. Two people are still buried under the debris and rescue parties are trying to reach them. 42 10 06
An inquest was reported on 16th October: A fire in the aircraft, caused by the ignition of a flare, caused the plane crash in the village of Somersham when eleven civilians were killed and seven houses destroyed. The crew were compelled to bale out from the aircraft, which was engaged on an operational flight 42 10 16 # c.26.1

Milton's Centenarian. In a bungalow looking on to the Fen Road, Milton, lives a kindly, white-haired lady, who attained her 100th year last Monday. She is Mrs. Eliza Gooding, and is affectionately known as "The Centurion" She enjoyed a "great" birthday in more ways than one. Among her 14 telegrams was one very special greetings sheet which read: "The King and Queen are much interested to hear that you are celebrating your 100th birthday and send you hearty congratulations and good wishes." Mrs. Gooding, who lives with her daughter, Mrs. George Pearson, is able to trace her lineage back to very ancient farming stock, and she originally came to Milton, where she has remained for 66 years, from Willingham

Famous General. — I learned with great interest this week (writes Watchman) that Lt. Gen. S. Rowell, commander of the Allied Forces which recaptured Kokoda, New Guinea, who was pictured in the National Press some days ago, has associations with Cottenham. Writing from Dulwich, Mr. T. Gautrey states: "During his military training in this country, he was a frequent visitor to Cottenham, and spent one holiday picking fruit in the Histon Road orchards. At the beginning of the war he was promoted to General - the youngest in Australia. His forebears were emigrants from Cottenham about a century ago and settled in South Australia and grew fruit; some of the family are still doing so. The family, now much increased, have been remarkably patriotic, four of them went voluntarily through the South African campaign at the end of the last century and eight came to assist during the Great War, Several, among them Gen. Rowell, are helping in the present, war. The emigrants lived in Church End, and their barn was the original meeting place of one of the Baptist chapels.

Contract published between Richard Lofts, of Abington Parva, widower, and Mary Tilbrooke, of Castle Camps, widow, in this market Three Several Days, this being the last day of 'publishing." At the Restoration (1660), when all Acts of the Long Parliament passed after the trouble with the King were expunged from the Statute Book, the children born of these marriages were rendered illegitimate, but later on a special Act was passed to legitimise them.

Mr. and Mrs. George Ingle, of Church Street, Willingham, celebrated the 60th anniversary of their wedding on Saturday, Both are natives of Willingham, and have lived practically all their lives in the parish. Since their marriage at the parish church they have lived at the same spot in Church Street, but the old thatched home gave way to a new and substantial one some, years ago. Their family consisted of two sons and three daughters. Their eldest son, Albert George, was killed in action in the last war, and their daughters. Beatrice and Olive Jane passed away some years ago, all unmarried. The second son is the Rev. Frank Ingle, Rector of Outwell, and the third is Mr. Horace Ingle, of Church Street, who continues to carry on the business of nurseryman, Mr. and Mrs. George Ingle are both members of the church. In failing health at the respective ages of 86 and 82 years, they nevertheless continue to take an interest in all local matters.

New Archdeacon. Announcement has already been made that the Ven. Dr. K, D. Knowles is resigning the Archdeaconry of Huntingdon (says Watchman). He will relinquish the office on March 31 next, but will remain Vicar of Diddington. Now I learn that the Bishop of Ely has appointed the Rev. W. A. Uthwatt, Rector of Brampton, to be Archdeacon in his place. For some years Mr. Uthwatt was vicar of Bottisham.

Sole survivor of Air Crash. — Mr. John Howard, the young British diplomat, who was the sole survivor of an air liner crash in Peru last week, is the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Howard, of 257, Chesterton Road. Cambridge. His parents on Friday received a cablegram from the hospital where he was taken, saying that there is no need to worry. Mr Howard, who is 28 years of age, was educated at the Perse School, and later at St. Catharine's College, Cambridge, of which he is an M.A. He went out to South America about six months ago, and at the time of the crash was flying from Buenos Aires to Miami. News from Lima (Peru) described how Mr. Howard was catapulted from the back seat of the plane when the Liner crashed into a mountainside. The purser was sitting, with him, and was also thrown out but he died later from his injuries. For three days, it was stated, Mr. Howard lay injured beside the bodies of the victims before rescue services could reach him. The bodies of the 15 dead, who included three women and two other British diplomats, were taken to the Anglo-American Hospital at Lima.

Prisoner of War. News has at last been received of another Cambs. man of whom nothing had been heard for some time. Mrs. J. Goodrick, 2, High Street. Death of Mr, C, R. W. Adeane,—We regret to announce the death of the Lord Lieutenant, Mr. C. R. W. Adeane, who passed peacefully away at Babraham yesterday in his 80th year. Mr. Adeane had been in failing health for some time and had been confined to the Hall since Christmas. Mrs. Adeane died in July, 1941, and he is survived by one son, Lt. Col. Robert Adeane, who has been serving abroad for three years, and by five daughters. Mr. Adeane was educated at Eton and Christchurch, Oxford, and married in 1888. Since early in the 18th century, the name of Adeane has been an honoured one in Cambridgeshire and ever since the family have maintained the closest association with .the county's history. Mr. Adeane, no less than other members of his family … enjoyed his patronage, and all will miss the great personal interest he took in their activities. His father, grandfather and great grandfather in turn all represented the county in Parliament, but Mr. Adeane was unsuccessful, when he stood as Liberal candidate for South Hunts, in 1900. A Justice of the Peace for the County since 1886, he was Vice-Chairman of the County Quarter Sessions from 1912 to 1915. It was in the latter year that he was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Cambridgeshire. He had seen many years of service on the County Council, which he first joined in 1892. He was a member for three years and then, after a break, was elected again in 1904. Babraham Hall, which has been the seat of the Adeane family for generations …

A packed audience at the Cambridge Guildhall gave unanimous support to a resolution to the government to take all action in fighting the Nazi party's extermination of the Jews in Europe.
A resolution associating themselves with the feelings of horror and indignation expressed by the allied nations in the Nazi policy of extermination of the Jews in occupied Europe was passed. In spite of the terrible bestialities that were being perpetrated upon them the Jews would not cry out for revenge but would expect justice. The criminals must be published in order to prevent similar crimes in the future. A Jewish member of the Polish National Council said the Jews would survive their present suffering. There would come a time when eye witness documents of mass murders and bestiality would find a place on the table of the Nations' Courts of Justice. The Jews had earned the right to demand action and wished to live in Palestine as free human beings and as a free community. The final speaker made it clear that the persecution of the Jews was only the larger part of a persecution against all subjected nations. The suffering of the Jews was only greater numerically. Dealing with anti-Semitism in all cases Germany was at the root of it, and it was Nazi money that sponsored such movements. He also answered those who constantly stated that it was the Jews who operated the whole of the black market

Sturgeon caught In the Cam - Mayor Newton, of Cambridge, tells in a diary, under the date of June 11, 1680, of a fine sturgeon being caught in the Cam (says Watchman). Here is the entry condensed and in modern English: "At the back of Alderman Dickinson's house in Cambridge next to the causeway between Small Bridges and Newnham, against Felmonger's Pits, was taken in a casting net, by a fisherman named Coward, a sturgeon near two yards long measured by my Japan cane. I saw it measured, and it was very near two lengths of my cane, which, with its ivory handle, is Bear a yard long. The waters were then pretty high, and the place where the fish \vas caught about four feet deep."

Acute staff position.—The acute position caused by the call-up of staff, was the subject of a special statement by the Chairman of the Cambridgeshire County Council (Ald. W. J. Taylor) at Saturday's meeting of the Council. Ald. Taylor said that, just before the war the staff operating from the Shire Hall - 30 men and 25 women. Of the men, 60 were serving with the forces, 15 were no longer with the council, and seven had been lent to other services. Only 48, therefore, of the original men were left, and of these 26 were over 42. Seventeen of the remainder were liable to be directed elsewhere by the Manpower Board, but only two were under 35 years of age. "We in Cambridgeshire, therefore, cannot be accused of 'protecting' a lot of young men from the services," the speaker added. Ald, Taylor next dealt with the women, and there was a general laugh after he said, "Two are married, and two are liable to be directed. Dr. Woodman asked "What — to marriage?" # c.35.1

Two N.C.O.s of the American Army appeared before a U.S. court martial in Cambridge Guildhall on various charges, one of them a shooting incident. It was alleged that they had without lawful permission taken and used a Jeep, property of the United States, acted in a disorderly manner and fired a Thompson sub-machine gun in the Headquarters orderly room. It was stated that both accused went to a dance; they returned to their billets and later went out in a Jeep. A Military Policeman said he was on duty at a dance and observed a soldier leave the room. He was swearing so he remonstrated with him and was subsequently forced to strike him. Sometime later he was typing out his report at Headquarters when four or five soldiers entered the room. Someone asked him to come outside but he made his way to the phone. A struggle followed and he was unable to communicate with his officer. A voice shouted 'Let me have him', and two shots were fired through the ceiling with a Tommy Gun. 43 04 09 # c.45.7

Pygmalion. — In presenting George Bernard Shaw's Pygmalion at the Village College on Friday and Saturday, the Histon and Impington Dramatic Society put on undoubtedly one of its best performances. In its 10th season, it was the 25th production of the society. There were large and appreciative audiences both evenings, and the ovation accorded the players at the end of each performance was well deserved. It would be invidious to pick put any member of the cast, for all were in remarkably good form, and the whole show was put over with considerable credit, a high standard of acting being reached.

Spankers in Dame schools, — The mention of a "spanker" being used in dame schools (schools for the young usually kept by women) of a century or so ago has aroused considerable interest (says Watchman). An octogenarian correspondent, who, in her infant days sometimes "had the spanker," writes, "The spanker, which preceded the cane or willow stick, was a wonderful implement shaped like a small or domestic coal shovel, or an enlarged wooden spoon. The usual side of the 'business portion,' rectangular or oval, was about four inches by three inches, and half an inch in thickness, with a handle of about one foot in length." The implement ‘patted' the child's open hand, the 'hurt' or 'spank' being thus distributed over a wide area, not 'stinging' a small portion of the palm as a cane or osier would. The 'spanker' is said to have had its origin in Holland. It is to be seen pictured in some of the old Dutch paintings, notably 'The Village School' by Jan Steen (1626-79) who was known as the Moliere of painting. In this painting a village schoolmaster is depicted using the implement upon the hand of a weeping lad.

Mr. Pemberton was born at Ludford, Lincolnshire, in 1866, and was the elder son of Mr. William Wingate. He received his early education at Tonbridge School, going up to Guy's Hospital in 1885. After qualifying as a doctor, he came up to Jesus College in 1890 and took his M.B. degree four years later. He then went into practice at Cambridge with the late Mr.

Hyde Hills and Dr. Doughtey, first at 60, St. Andrew's Street, and after 1911, from Scroope House. He retired from the practice in 1919. Mr. Pemberton was married in 1895, but lost his wife by death in the following year. They had one daughter, now the wife of Mr. R. V. Southwell, F.R.S. In 1915, he was married again to Miss Viola Pemberton, of Trumpington Hall, and in 1923, when Mrs. Pemberton became possessor of the Pemberton estates, they changed their name by Royal licence from Wingate to Pemberton. There are for sons of the marriage. Mr. Pemberton was a Justice of the Peace for the county for many years, a member of the Addenbrooke's Hospital General Committee and from 1933-39 chairman of the Evelyn Nursing Home. When he was appointed High Sheriff for Cambridgeshire, Huntingdonshire and the Isle of Ely in 1935 one of his duties was the reading of the proclamation of the Coronation of King George VI

Home Guard Parade. The General Officer, Commanding-in-Chief, Eastern Command; Lt.-Genl. J. A. H. Gemmnell, C.B., D.S.O., M.C., took the salute at Cambridge on Sunday at one of the biggest military parades the town has ever witnessed. The parade, which had counterparts all over the country, was in celebration of the third anniversary of the founding of the Home Guard, and over 4,000 Home Guard from Cambridge and district were present. The scale of the proceedings can be judged by the fact that the march past the saluting base alone took more than 40 minutes. To use the official wording, the occasion "was designed to show the Home Guard to the people." Genl. Gemmell said, after an inspection: "I would like to . . . congratulate the battalions and other detachments on the parade. The turn-out has been good, arms drill quite creditable and everyone has stood firm and steady, which is a credit to you all." # c.45.7

Big Fire at Sawston.—Over 600,000 paper containers were containers were destroyed or damaged by fire and water at the premises of Pulp Industries Ltd., Sawston, on Tuesday. About £2,000 worth of damage was done to stock, and it is estimated that it will cost a further £1,000 to make good the damage to the buildings. But an official of the company said later: "Things are not as bad as were at first thought." Nobody was hurt and the production machinery was unaffected. The cause of the fire it was stated, is not known, but the police have been carrying out investigations.

Days To Be Remembered. — Although, taken as a whole (writes Watchman) Sunday School anniversary services are not what they used to be, it is interesting to know that in some parts of the country the event is just as eagerly anticipated and special hymns are practised for weeks before the event. The Methodist Sunday School anniversary at Meldreth attracts child lovers from many miles around and a special feature is the performing of a little playlet at the afternoon service. Each child is given a part to play, thus creating an interest in the Sunday School which is not soon forgotten. A north countryman staying in the village told a correspondent that people at his home look on the children's anniversaries as very special events, but in this case, children and teachers parade their district and sing hymns in the streets before the service. Each denomination has its own special district and neither encroaches on the other even though each anniversary is on a different Sunday. He told how all the children were "decked out" and of the rivalry for each district to "out-deck" the other. About four members of a local band - usually Church Army or Salvation Army - volunteered to lead the singing. Collections for Sunday School funds are taken at each stopping place and, my correspondent was informed, amounted to anything between £100 and £150

Hymn Singing for War Charities. I hear that Mr Fred Gibson, of Little Downham, has raised a considerable sum of money in aid of war charities by his hymn singing tours in various parts of the district. In the evening he continued his tour and the afternoon's collections were considerably augmented. During the tour Red Cross Cadets and Nurses went out with collecting boxes, a total of £35 1s. 8d. being raised for Prisoners' of War Parcels Fund. Camouflage. Passing by an outhouse the other day (writes Watchman), a farmer caught sight of a hedgehog going in at the door, but when he went to investigate, it had, to his amazement disappeared. The floor was of concrete and the place was quite empty, except for a heap of sawdust which a hen had chosen as her nest and was "sitting" there. The incident was forgotten until a few days later, when he heard noises like a litter of newly born puppies coming from the same direction. Still nothing could be found until Biddy was lifted off her nest, protesting very loudly. Then by the side of her nest was discovered a tunnel in the heap of sawdust and inside were newly-born hedgehogs.

Farmers for miles around gave livestock — ranging from cows to kids — to be sold for auction for the Red Cross and St. John Fund. And hundreds of farmers turned up to buy what was on sale. Not that the auction was confined to animals; far from it. There were also bottles of whisky and champagne, as well as one ton of sulphate of ammonia from Swaffham Prior, to be sold.

Old Register, - The following note by the Vicar appears in this month's Parish Magazine (at Melbourn): The first names in the burial register of 1558 are Campion, Atkinson, Luddington and Poole. All these names are no longer found in the parish. Soon after occurs the names that are still with us — Stockbridge, Webb, Smith, Collis and Ingrey. A correspondent adds: "Melbourn's 385-years-old register is one of the oldest in the district, the starting date of some of the others being Orwell 1560, Fowlmere 1581, Shepreth 1569 and Meldreth 1681. It may also be recalled that after various unsuccessful attempts, commencing in 1538, to secure a proper register of births, marriages and deaths in a village, it was not until July 1, 1837 that the present system of registration was established in England and Wales, Scotland followed in 1854 and Ireland in 1863." 43 08 06

Boy of top of Express. An amazing story was told to Mr. Lionel Abrahams (Coroner for Hunts.) when he held an inquest in the waiting room at Abbots Ripton Station on Saturday afternoon. The story was that a boy who received fatal injuries whilst climbing along the top of coaches of an express train through being struck by a bridge under which the train was passing, was knocked on to the four-foot way and then run over by two light engines. The boy was 14 years and 10 months old and his home address was at Camberwell. He had been sent, by a juvenile court to an approved school at Darlington. The Coroner said it was clear that deceased met his death from injuries received when he came into contact, with the bridge, and his verdict was 'Accidental death,'

A double Miracle? There is every sign (writes Watchman) that the harvest, in Cambs. this year will exceed in quality and yield that of 1942. This "is not only, as Mr. H. C Webb, the Cambridge farming authority, puts it, a miracle due to the weather, but also, I venture to suggest, a miracle of hard work as well. There is no doubt that when the full history of the war is written, many chapters will be devoted to the great part played in its success by the farming community and in this Cambridgeshire has won a worthy place. This is indeed not only the 'crown of the year.' but the crown of our agriculturists' valiant labours during the years of war. No one will quarrel with Mr. Webb's apt description-— 'Victory Harvest.' 43 08 27

Country Mansion Blazes. Newsells Park, the beautiful Queen Anne country mansion home of Sir Humphrey de Trafford at Royston, was badly damaged by fire on Wednesday night. Sir Humphrey told a reporter that only the walls were left standing. "Fortunately" he said, "all my own possessions had been removed. My wife and I live in a cottage 100 yards down from the house, and Lady de Trafford was awakened early this morning by screams. Two girls had to be rescued from the top floor with the help of ladders," Sir Humphrey hopes that his valuable cellar, which was bricked in, has not been ruined.

Young People's morals. - Following a meeting of many prominent people in the religious and social side of St Ives who were gravely concerned about the increasing laxity of morals among young people, the following resolution was presented at Thurs-day's meeting of the Town Council: "This meeting greatly deplores the growing laxity of morals, conduct and the drinking habits among some young people of the town, and earnestly press for the support of public opinion to whatever can wisely be done to counteract the deplorable state of things". The resolution was supported by the Council. The Mayor said the resolution had been sent to him as a magistrate, and he pointed out the numerous organisations in the town working to counteract this moral laxity. In the case of the young girls there was always the influence of their mothers and the youth organisations at work. It was a very difficult matter, and he did not see how as a public body, they could do much more in the matter. 43 09 17

Death of Prominent Farmer. By the death of Mr. John Russell Jarman, of the Grange, Kneesworth, another exponent of the old-style farming — now a fast dwindling race — has been removed and his death means not only the loss of a first rate farmer, but a high-grade cattle dealer well known and highly respected throughout East Anglia and other parts of the country. He had been in indifferent health the past five or six years and death occurred on Friday morning last at the age of 74 years. He built up a large first class breeding flock of cattle and sheep and in doing so became a well-known figure throughout the West Country (the home of good cattle) and he was always a regular attendant at the Cambridge East Anglian markets. An inverted rainbow.—A letter to the Editor, signed S. R. G, Willis, Little Shelford, states: I witnessed a curious phenomenon on November 25, and it would be interesting to know whether other people noticed it or whether anyone else can explain it. At about 2.30p.m. my attention was directed to it by my companion, and together we watched it for perhaps four minutes, after which it faded quickly out. At that hour the sun's altitude would have been about 13½ degrees and the azimuth 160 degrees west. The bow was right above the sun at an altitude of 60 or 70 degrees. The arc was perhaps one of 40 degrees or more. The red end of the spectrum was towards the sun on the convex edge. The violet end was particularly well marked. The sky was blue, with light mists blowing very rapidly across it. There were a good- many aeroplane trails about. I could under-stand a ring around the sun, but why the 'inverted' arc with its centre somewhere near the zenith?

D.S.C. Award.—Acting Squadron Leader Guy de Grave Sells. D.F.C.. R.A.F.V.R., No. 83 Sqdn., has been awarded the D.S.O. in recognition of flying operations against the enemy. Squadron Ldr, Sells has participated in a very large number of sorties, involving attacks on targets in the Ruhr and many other important centres. He is an outstanding leader whose achievements have been highly commendable. His home is at Harston.

"Insufficient sleep." — At the annual meeting of the Cambridgeshire Association of the National Union of Teachers, held at the Lion Hotel, Cambridge, on Saturday, it was agreed to submit the following resolution to the N.U.T. Easter Conference: "That this conference instructs the Executive to call the serious attention of the Board of Education to the ill-effects, physical, mental and educational, on schoolchildren of insufficient sleep. It further instructs the Executive to use its influence with the Press to promote a campaign designed to induce parents to send children to bed at an early hour, under conditions which will enable them to obtain the amount of sleep they require,"

Schoolmaster for 40 years – By the death last week of Mr. Percy Robert Robinson, of Trumpington, the county loses a typical village schoolmaster. Aged 65, he had been a schoolmaster for 40 years and for 36 years headmaster at Trumpington School. During this long period, his staunchness and character caused him to become the friend and adviser of the villagers, and his passing removes a man of wise counsel and high standing

Chief Constable says goodbye. The very great regret of Cambridge Borough Council at the retirement of the Chief Constable (Mr, R. J. Pearson) was expressed at yesterday's meeting by the Mayor (Ald W. L. Briggs). "We all regret," he said "that the time has come when we must part with Mr. Pearson. I think the resolution of the Watch Committee will be accepted by the whole of the council. I was a magistrate a year before Mr. Pearson was appointed, and I should like to bear testimony to his services." Twenty-five years ago, said the Mayor, the police force was in a very different position. It had now been humanised - Mr. Pearson in reply, said he had served under 26 mayors, "My retirement will be a very great wrench. All my life I had been a policeman, I was born in a police building, and I had gone all through the ranks. After service of 41½ years, I feel I ought to give way to a younger man. # c.34.7

Fifty years with local Papers. - For nearly 50 years associated with the Cambridge newspapers, Mr. C.R. Vincent has died at Malvern at the age of 85. It was only two months ago that he relinquished his association with the "Cambridge Daily News" and "Independent Press," and past and present members of the staff joined warmly in a presentation to him on that occasion. Formerly engaged on clerical work with the Post Office Savings Bank Department in London., Mr. Vincent was obliged by health reasons .to give up his duties. He came down to Cambridgeshire and established his home in Swavesey, becoming, in 1898, village correspondent. In 1922 he was appointed to take charge of village correspondence at the head office of the newspapers. With over 70 villages in the county, his training in the Civil Service came in remarkably useful. It was his duty to keep a record of every paragraph sent in, and it was his proud boast that he could always turn up any item at will. Mr. Vincent gave a helping hand to Uncle Robin in the early days of the Robin Fellowship, and he was affectionately known in the office as "Uncle Cyril." # c.04

Landbeach Diamond Wedding,-— The marriage register at All Saints' Church. Landbeach, records that on Christmas Day, 1883, the wedding of Mr. Arthur Fromant of Milton, and Miss Mary Ann Bowers, of Landbeach, was solemnised by the Rev Dr. Brian Walker, and to commemorate the event of 60 years ago, a celebration family party was held on Saturday last at Ranworth House, the residence of their son, Mr. A. E Fromant. Nearly all their married life has been spent in Landbeach but Quy and Histon could, for brief spells, claim them as parishioners. Of their family of 14 children, 10 are still living. Three are now in the U.S.A. (George Charlie and Mabel) and Stanley is serving with H.M, Forces in India Among a host of congratulatory messages there were 30 wedding cards and five telegrams, which included one from the King and Queen and one from the U.S.A. Mr Fromant is 79 years old and Mrs Fromant 82.

War-time Christmas.—The sound of church bells in the still, cold air of the pre-dawn brought a reminder on Christmas morning that much has happened since the greatest of all festivals was celebrated a year ago. For many it was, inevitably in war, a time of sorrow, but beneath the cloud of sorrow could be seen the light of victory, bringing with it the hope and belief that 1943 may be the last Christmas of the war. With many of their loved ones away from home, scattered over the four corners of the earth, the people of Cambridge yet made the most of their celebrations. And in many homes absent places at the fireside were filled by other Service men and women, both British and American, who were offered that personal hospitality which means so much at Christmas tide. The Mayor and Mayoress of Cambridge, Ald and Mrs. W. L. Briggs, made a particularly full round of calls to hospitals etc on Christmas morning and afternoon, and it was well after tea-time when they made their way back to their own home.

Having topped the list before, the junior schools, on this occasion, with £775 13s. 6d. to their credit raised considerably more than double the amount of any other village. The Linton Village College, in spite of the fact that a number of the students save in their home villages, stepped up their amount to £481 16s., the second highest in the area. The grand total was £1,257 9s. 6d.

Village names, — It is well known (writes Watchman) that many villages in Cambridgeshire have down through the years, been spelt in various ways, but Haslingfield seems to hold the record locally. At the January meeting of the Women's Institute the Vicar gave a talk on the history of the village, and it was revealed that in old deeds & records the name 'Haslingfield' has been spelt in 101 different ways. Can any other Cambridgeshire village approach this remarkable figure?

Agricultural Cottages. The first group of agricultural cottages to be completed in Cambridgeshire was officially opened at Waterbeach on Saturday, afternoon by the Chairman of Chesterton Rural Council, Mr. W. D. F. Davey, in the presence of other officials of the council and representatives of the builders. Built as a terrace, the four Cottages is situated in Piece's Lane. Each comprises a parlour and living room downstairs, with a kitchenette, and three bed- rooms upstairs. Electric light is installed and cooking is done on a coal range. There is also provision for hot and cold water. Another feature which will appeal particularly to the womenfolk is the generous built-in cupboard accommodation. 44 01 14

New Chief Constable.—Mr. B. N. Bebbington, 33-year-old sub-divisional inspector of the Metropolitan Police, is to be the new Chief Constable of Cambridge. It is expected that he will commence his new duties in succession to Mr. R. J. Pearson in a little over a month's time. The news was made public at yesterday's meeting of .the Borough Council by the Mayor (Aid. W. L. Briggs), who said that 45 applications for the post had been received, and seven candidates selected for interview. Mr. Bebbington joined the Metropolitan Police in 1932, and after serving three years as a constable, was sent to the Metropolitan Police College at Hendon. He had served in different divisions, and had been appointed a sub-divisional Inspector at Tower Bridge. "I hope and believe we have a worthy successor to Mr. R. J. Pearson," concluded the Mayor. # c.34.7

Village Timekeeper. — At the time of going to press, we are informed that the list of subscribers for the upkeep of the church tower at Melbourn has been placed in the window of the post office for all to see. Some villagers complained about the clock being deliberately stopped in order to call attention to the need of money, but the plan appears to have been effective, as the subscription list is larger than some expected it to be. There is, however, ample space for many more names, and more money is required. It is to be hoped however that a more satisfactory and agreeable method of obtaining the annual amount called for will be formulated and adopted. 44 01 28

Believed damaged by anti-aircraft fire over the London area, a German raider, thought to be a Dornier 217, crashed on some allotments in the country late last night. The crew bailed out and the later captured between London and Cambridge, and the plane narrowly missed roofs of houses as it crashed on the soft ground of the allotments. As it was only a concrete post at the foot of a private garden prevented to plane from continuing another 100-ft into a row of houses. An air raid warden said, "I was on patrol with another ward and when I heard a plane rattling. It seemed to be getting lower and lower and then I heard a sort of mild crash. I knew it was very close to the houses so we went through a hedge and on the allotments saw the outline of the machine. Incendiary bombs which lay all around the plane made investigation difficult but it was established pretty soon that there were none of the crew left on board. Police and members of the Civil Defence Service helped form a cordon round the machine until it have been examined by R.A.F. experts when an armed guard was posted. In view of the possibility of time bombs having been left on the plane wardens warned occupies of all houses in the district to open windows and were out again at first light to search for any bombs or other objects which might have been flung from the machine. 44 02 24, photos 44 02 25 # c.45.7 # c.26.1

Cambridge newspaper of 200 Years Ago. This year (writes Morley Stuart, Editor of the Cambridge Independent Press and Chronicle) marks the 200th anniversary of the first publication of a weekly newspaper in Cambridge. Its title was the "Cambridge Journal and Flying Post," and it was linked by the process of amalgamation and absorption with the present "Independent Press and Chronicle." Such an occasion, I think, even in these days of restricted space, calls for some commemoration. Unfortunately, the earliest copies are not now in existence, or it would be possible for us to add yet another heading to the regular feature which interests so many readers - "From Our Files." Many papers had been published at various times in Cambridge in the interest of one or other of the political parties. Some of them had a brief and inglorious existence; others continued for many years until taken over by more successful publications.

Old Clay Pipes. Among the many small and portable relics now being searched for and collected by visitors to Cambridgeshire are old hand-made clay tobacco pipes (writes Watchman). Really old clay pipes in perfect condition are now somewhat rare, but good specimens, most of them damaged, are occasionally dug or ploughed up in the Fenlands around Ely. These home-made clays of primitive design went out of fashion half a century or more ago, when machine-made ones were introduced. An octogenarian Cambridgeshire Fenlander says that when he was a lad short clay pipes were called "doots"; they were retailed in village shops for one penny, but later one halfpenny was the price of a new pipe. The usual price of a long churchwarden clay was threepence.

This year marks the 200th anniversary of the first publication of a weekly newspaper in Cambridge, the 'Cambridge Journal and Flying Post'. Many papers have been published at various time in the interest of one or other of the political parties. When I first set foot in Cambridge in March 1909 to take up a post on the Cambridge Independent Press, [wrote Morley Stuart) I went into a newsagent's shop and asked for a copy of each of the local papers. There were then four 'weeklies' running in addition to the 'Cambridge Daily News'. One was making its last appearance. The 'Cambridge Express' was being taken over by the 'Cambridgeshire Weekly News' published in conjunction with the C.D.N. It became known as the 'Weekly News and Express'. A few years later, during the last war, the 'Independent Press' which was then more than 100 years old, was amalgamated with its younger rival and the name adopted was the 'Independent Press and News'. Then, a few years before the present war, the 'Cambridge Chronicle', the oldest surviving local weekly, was taken over and the title altered to the 'Independent Press and Chronicle'. There have been other Cambridge papers before and since. [The C.D.N. carried a two-page article charting the development of the press – at a time when paper was severely rationed due to the War] – 44 02 29-29e

"Revealing Britain," an exhibition of British Council photographs, now on view at the Kodak Galleries, 84 Regent Street, London, W.I, shows for the first time a selection of the photographs which the British Council is sending abroad with its Press articles, etc; (says Watchman). One feature of interest to us in Cambridgeshire is a series recently taken of Impington Village College, showing the activities both during the daytime and during the evenings, when it is used for adult education and as a social centre. Copies of two of these pictures reached me yesterday. One is a spectacular "shot" of an open-air physical training class and the other an informal glimpse of a meeting of the College Horticultural Society.

12s rate.—Cambridgeshire County Council on Saturday adopted without debate the total rate of 12s in the £ proposed by the Finance Committee. It is made up as follows. General County Purposes 3s 6d, High Education 1s, Special County Purposes 3s, Elementary Education 4s 6d. The Chairman of the Finance Committee said: "To judge from the figures in the budget, one might take a rosy view of the finances of the County Council."

Oldest Inhabitant. — The death occurred on January 27 of Mrs. Sarah Ann Farnham, the oldest inhabitant of Meldreth. Mrs. Farnham was the widow of Mr. Thomas Farnham, who died 20 years ago. She was within a week of her ninety-second birthday. Only two members of the family of five are left.

Ranji's Church Clock. As much is now being written and said about parish or church clocks attention might be drawn to a paragraph which appears in Arthur Mee's book on Yorkshire North Riding published in 1941. Writing (on page .77) of the village of East Gilling, the author says: "It has a spacious green where an Indian rajah loved to play cricket and a church with a 16th century tower" The rajah was the famous Prince Ranjitsinhji, one of the best batsmen of our time. He lived at the rectory with the tutor he had met at Cambridge. It was Ranji who gave the church tower its clock.

Performance of "Aladdin"—an excellent performance of "Aladdin" was given in Impington Village College on Thursday week by a cast of sixty performers, and was enjoyed by a large audience.

Death of Mr. H. G. Spicer. Many in Cambridgeshire and beyond will learn with regret of the death on Saturday last of Mr. Henry George Spicer, J.P., of 20 Old Queen Street, Westminster, and of Homewood, Sawston. He was 68. A former High Sheriff, Mr. Spicer was well-known in Cambridge as a magistrate, and on the retirement of Judge Farrant, became chairman of the Cambridge Division. He was known in Sawston as chairman of Edward Towgood and Sons, Ltd., the old-established paper mills, which he bought for his company in 1918, and which he re-organised and modernised extensively. He also bought the Towgood estate and other land in Sawston and Whittlesford, in order to develop a flourishing group of factories for companies of which he was chairman. For his employees and others in neighbouring villages, Mr. Spicer was particularly thoughtful, and for these he laid out a sports ground, erected a theatre and cinema and a reading room and library. He also supported many other local improvements and charities. He was a generous benefactor to Sawston Village College, which, when it was built, was the first of its kind in the country.

Judge's Hint to Overcharged. At Cambridge County Court on Wednesday, His Honour Judge Lawson Campbell said: "I hear many complaints of overcharging in Cambridge. It may be so or it may not be, but insofar as overcharging for furnished accommodation is concerned, there is a remedy in this court for anyone who thinks he or she is aggrieved. If they don't take that remedy, which is speedy and not very expensive, that is their own fault."

Death of Tom Phillips. The funeral took place at Trumpington on Friday of Mr. Thomas Martin Phillips, of 1, Hauxton Road, who died on the previous Monday at the age of 70. Mr. Phillips, who had been in failing health for some time, was well-known in sporting circles, particularly football, having been connected with the Cambs. Football Association since 1902 first as a member of the Council, then as acting Vice-President, Assistant Secretary and Hon. League Secretary. He was also actively associated with the Cambs. Referees Association. In his younger days he was a stalwart supporter of the old Albert Institute, and excelled at boxing, cricket, football, gymnastics, rowing and swimming. At cricket he was a first string bowler, a decent bat and a good fielder and captain. Jack Hobbs played for the Ainsworth C.C. under his captaincy. Tom also captained the Albert Institute football team and later was a member of the Cambridge St. Mary's team when they won the Senior Cup for the first time in 1898-9. He played a leading part in the formation of the Cambridge Railway Sports Club, of which he was the first secretary, a post he held for several years. Presentation to doctor. An informal little ceremony, probably unique in the history of Cambridgeshire, took place at Harston on .Sunday afternoon, when representatives from 22 villages gathered to make a presentation to Dr. W. J. Young, in celebration of his 75th birthday and 44 years of medical practice in the district. The ceremony took place at his house, where brief, but moving, tributes to Dr. and Mrs. Young were paid by some of the guests, and on behalf of nearly 1,000 Cambridgeshire residents from the villages, Dr. Young was presented with several gifts and an inscribed address. Afterwards tea was served, complete with an iced birthday cake with 75 candles.

Front Line Woman. A London artillery man recently wrote to his parents: "A Y.M.C.A. canteen is due at our gun position today, and believe it or not, a woman is in charge — one of the very few seen in the front line." the worker is the Hon. The boys who had been firing the guns were very grateful for the hot tea, while those who were going back to the guns asked me to keep some hot for them."

Recovering stolen property. At Cambridgeshire Quarter Sessions, on Friday, the chairman (Mr. Graf ton Pryor) had something to say on the proportion of stolen property recovered during the past year. He pointed out that according to the Chief Constable's report that value of property stolen during the year was about £9,081, of which property worth only £989 was recovered. "At first it struck me as a rather horrifying state of affairs that something over £8,000 worth was not recovered,'" he added, "but going into the matter, I find that it is not as bad as it looks, because one lady alone lost jewellery worth about £5,000. That, of course, goes a long way towards the total of property not recovered."

Witchcraft. The recent witchcraft, trial in London (writes Watchman was of particular interest to many of the oldest inhabitants of Fenland villages, where stories of witches and their nefarious doings may often be heard. Indeed, a writer in one of the London magazines about five years ago went as far as to say: "The Eastern Counties in general, and the Fenlands of Cambridgeshire and Lincolnshire in particular, are still the hotbeds of superstition and witchery, and to some of the old folk in the most out-of-the-way villages, the witch's cauldron is as real today as it was to Macbeth." It was in the days of the Commonwealth that full rage against witches broke out (writes a Fenland correspondent), in Suffolk alone in one year 60 persons were hanged for witchcraft. After the revolution of 1688 the belief in witchcraft; began slowly to decline, but as; late as 1716 at Huntingdon, a Mrs. Hicks and her nine - year - old daughter were executed for "being in league with the Devil and raising a terrible storm of wind by taking off her stocking and shoes." Mother and daughter are believed to have been the last in England executed for practising witchcraft, the penalty being abolished in 1736

A Medicine Woman's Garden. A correspondent (writes Watchman) sends me the following note, written by an old lady now over 80 years of age. "I have read about 'medicine' or 'wise women' in villages. When a little girl I lived in a Cambridgeshire village and next door to an old woman said to be a witch and a fortune-teller, also a maker of ointment and pills. She was very ugly and much wrinkled, but I will not name her or the village, because some of her family are still living. I used to run errands for her, and go with her for walks, as she was very old. She had a garden full of wild flowers, most of which she is said to have used in her ointments, etc. I was always fond of plants and flowers, and knew her garden well. Some of the things she had, if I remember rightly were foxgloves, fennel, featherfew, coltsfoot, dandelion, sowthistle, periwinkle, woodsage, rosemary, mouse-ear, marigolds, and, of course, rhubarb and common nettles. In our walks in the fields she would take a bag and collect, when in season, cowslips, male fern, red clover, bark from oak and alder trees, also the leaves of the white violet and horse chestnut. A doctor came in a gig only when sent for and when children had a rash, pimples, bumps and minor aches and pains, they were taken to. the old medicine woman for treatment and parents appeared to" be perfectly satisfied." # c.39

"Saluting the Soldier". Will Cambridge make it a million? This is the question, the answer to which is eagerly—but confidently - awaited as the town's great "Salute the Soldier" Campaign draws to its close. Up to Wednesday night the total subscribed was £866,870, and while this is a particularly fine effort, a final spurt particularly by the small investors, is needed if the goal is to be reached and practical tribute paid to the grand fighting men of the modern British Army. A fine example has been set by the Cambridge schools, whose target was £5,000, and who, having already reached £5,181, have now been raised it to £10,000. The Week was effectively launched on Saturday afternoon, when Field Marshal Lord Ironside, whose birthday, incidentally, it was, opened an attractive and interesting exhibition of war equipment in the Corn Exchange, Cambridge. # c.45.7

U.S. Military cemetery dedicated. Memorial Day — the day when Americans pay special honour to their dead— was marked in Cambridgeshire on Tuesday, with a service at the U.S. Military Cemetery (at Madingley). High ranking officers of the American and British Armies, as well as the R.A.F. were present together with leading civic representatives of the Eastern Region and the Town, University and County of Cambridge. A detachment of the British Legion, with their colours, members of the St. John Ambulance Brigade and the British Red Cross Society, and members of the W.V.S., who have undertaken to provide flowers for the chapel, were also among the large gathering. Centrepiece of the service was a small grass mound, rising from which flew the Stars and Stripes. The Bishop of Ely (Edward Wynn) walked to the mound from the little chapel, followed by the senior officers carrying wreaths. The ceremony opened with an invocation, followed by a scripture reading and a prayer for the fallen. An Order of the Day was read from the Allied commander-in-chief (Gen Eisenhower).

During the service either by accident or design three Fortresses flew low over the company. Official and private wreaths were laid and the proceedings came to a close with the National Anthems of America and Britain, the Benediction by the Bishop of Ely and finally "Taps" by two buglers. # c.45.7 # c.21.2

Some of the men engaged in the first assault wave of the Allied invasion of the continent are recovering from their wounds in the Leys Annexe, Cambridge and have told how the landings were made. Everything, according to one of them, went off as smoothly as an exercise, but immediately the landing craft ramps were lowered they were subjected to a withering crossfire from machine guns and a heavy and effective mortar barrage. The beach obstacles encountered were easier than anticipated and the Navy and Air Force bombarded the enemy shore positions.
All of the men spoke with high praise for the efficiency and unceasing work of the Naval and Army Medical Services.
Private S. Beaumont of Stowmarket, in the first wave of assault troops said in his section, the troops walked through the beach obstacles at low tide. "I was in the water with about 10 yards to go when I was hit by shrapnel", he said. "It was marvellous to see the battleships and cruisers, right in close, bombarding the enemy shore positions with the Air Force also pounding them from overhead.
Private Walker from Hull was hit while wading to the shore. "The invasion was all over for me within the first three minutes", he said. "Immediately, the Landing Craft ramp was let down there was a heavy crossfire from machine guns and mortars. Everything previous to this had gone off as smoothly as an exercise".
Lieutenant Peter Cruden, a former undergraduate of Pembroke College, Cambridge, landed with a company of Commandos soon after the initial landings. Things on the beaches were pretty well organized when we were there, he said, "and we stuck straight inland with the task of joining up with the airborne troops. We walked in practically unopposed apart from snipers, for about one mile before meeting opposition in a village. We had penetrated 2½- 3 miles inland before I was hit by a sniper. Up to then casualties with my company had been light".

Captain Thomas Dale of Guilford, who set up an anti-aircraft gun position on the beaches and was there for about an hour before being wounded, said "Enemy fire was from mortars and guns. But infantry went in and turned them out. After that, it was mainly sniping, and the scene on the beaches was one of desolation with burning vehicles".
Captain William Carruthers from London said, "I went in with the assault Royal Engineers and was in a tank. We cleared the beach obstacles and went about 200 yards inland. I was jumping out of the tank when hit by a hand grenade. Earlier four Germans had come running up to us with their hands up".
Lieutenant Eric Ashton, from Lytham St Annes, who went in with the second assault wave said, "We were running up the beach as the mortar bombs were coming down. The enemy mortar fire was heavy and effective.
Private J. Worlock of Bristol said he only saw four enemy planes over the beaches and they were unable to drop their bombs as they were immediately given battle by our fighters.
Private Derek James of Coventry who was wounded as soon as he said foot on the beaches said he was immediately attended to by the Royal Army medical core and taken to cover in a trench.
Gunner Flanagan of Luton was on the beaches for about four hours before being wounded and said that while enemy fire in his section was not heavy, the snipers were dangerous. During the landings the most effective enemy fire was from mortars.
His tribute to the Royal Navy for the treatment and care given by them after being wounded is typical of many expressions heard: "I have never seen such treatment given to human beings as they gave us to us" , he said, and added that surgeons, doctors and medical orders worked continuously.
Also in the hospital are two wounded German prisoners. 44 06 15

Link with Ely Cathedral. An interesting link with Ely Cathedral comes to notice as the .result of the award by the King in his Birthday Honours List of the silver leaf medal of the Victorian Order to Mr. W. Bell Kempton (says Watchman), He received the award on the completion of nearly 59 years as lay clerk at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, the medal entitling him to the designation M.V.O. He is 81 and his family have been connected with Ely Cathedral since the 14th century. His father was a lay clerk there and his great-great-grandfather, Mr. Thomas Kempton, was the composer of the service Kempton in B flat, which is still frequently sung in cathedral and collegiate churches. Effort to Save Town from Destruction. Driver Benjamin Gimbert gave a graphic account on Tuesday of the efforts of himself and his fireman to save a small Cambridgeshire town (Soham) from destruction when they discovered a blazing wagon in their ammunition train. He was giving evidence at the resumed inquest on the two victims of the explosion, which occurred on June 2, completely wrecking the local railway station and causing considerable damage to houses in the town. The blazing wagon, loaded with 500lb bombs, was nearest the engine, and after being uncoupled from 50 other wagons was being driven away when it exploded. The fireman and a signalman lost their lives. "As we approached the station," said the train driver (Driver Gimbert, of March), "I saw a fire in the first truck attached to the engine. The bottom of the wagon was ablaze all over. I asked the fireman to uncouple the blazing truck from the remainder of the train and he uncoupled it. The fireman then re-joined me on the footplate. I thought that by pulling away with the blazing wagon, we could save the in-habitants of the town and the station. That was my main worry. As we neared the signal-box, the signalman, 'Sailor' Bridges, appeared on the platform and I shouted to him to stop the mail train. Before he replied, there was the explosion. I think we had travelled 100 to 150 yards when the explosion occurred." Verdicts of 'Misadventure' were: recorded, tribute being paid to the railwaymen's bravery.

Boy Burned on Pylon.—An 11-year-old boy climbed| an electricity power pylon and was killed, it was stated at a Fen Drayton inquest on Friday afternoon. The fatality occurred at the junction of Gootes Lane and Mill Road on Wednesday evening. A schoolboy, aged 11, told how he, with two others, including the deceased, went bird's nesting. Witness, said he happened to look up and saw deceased a little way up the electricity standard. "I shouted to him to come down, but he would not." Deceased climbed up among the insulators near the top of the pylon, and hung over a girder that ran across the two pylons between insulators and among the wires. He saw the boy fall back and hang by his arms, with smoke coming from him, A lorry driver said he heard a crackling noise and saw the boy among the terminals about 30ft. from the ground. He was hanging limply with his left arm over a terminal and his right leg over a girder a little lower down. The boy fell from the pylon with his clothing all alight. He was badly burned and dead. It was stated that the high tension cable at that point carried 11,000 volts. The Coroner returned a verdict that the cause of death was shock by electrocution, through the boy climbing the pylon

Village Feast. According to an ancient custom, Melbourn's annual three-day feast commences on the first Thursday in July, but so little had previously been heard of the event this year that little or no feast was expected, mainly because of war-time restrictions of one kind or another. We have to record, however, the coming of one of the largest, liveliest and best patronised feasts for many years - within living memory, some old villagers say. 44 07 14

Explosion Heroes Honoured. Cambridgeshire people will feel a sense of keen satisfaction at the award of the George Cross - the civilian Victoria Cross—to two local men for their heroism in the ammunition train explosion at Soham last month. The awards were announced in the London Gazette. One of the men, Fireman James Nightall; aged 22, of the Hythe, Littleport, lost his life in the explosion. The other, Driver Benjamin Gimbert, aged 42, of 17, Estover Road, March, was severely injured, but was able to travel to Cambridge this week, accompanied by his wife, to receive the congratulations of his superiors on the award. The official citation said: "Gimbert and Nightall were fully aware of the contents of the wagon which was on fire and displayed outstanding courage in endeavouring to isolate it. There is no doubt that if the whole train had been involved, as it would have been but for the gallant action of the men concerned, there I would have been serious loss of life and property."

Holiday gala. An easy first in popularity with the stay-at-home Bank Holiday crowds at Cambridge on Monday was the big programme of sporting events on the Town football ground at Milton Road. Some 7,000 people made this event their mecca, and partly forgetting, at least, the troubled times of the moment, lapsed back for a few hours into the traditionally-English Bank Holiday spirit. Arranged by the Borough Entertainments Committee, the events included a continuous four-hour sports programme, an A.T.S. physical fitness display, a spectacular display of flags of the United Nations, a variety entertainment and a beauty show. 44 08 11

Oldest Ploughing Society?—The Cottenham and District. Ploughing Society, which claims to be the oldest in the country, will carry on its tradition and hold a ploughing match next month. Their last match was in 1939. The secretary (Mr. E. Blunt) tells me (says Watchman) that, before the war, a running commentary on a ploughing match was being given by the B.B.C., the commentator stating that the ploughing society in question was 64 years old and believed to be the oldest in the country. Mr. Blunt wrote to the B.B.C. saying that he had proof that the Cottenham and District Society had then been in existence for 84 years. He duly received an apology from the B.B.C.

Education Sunday. Sunday was observed at the Congregational, Church (Linton) as a day of prayer for the great work of education. In the course of his sermons, the Rev. J. S. Wilson emphasised the value of religious instruction in the schools, and welcomed the emphasis given by the Education Act to worship and Bible teaching which is to be provided in the curriculum of every school. Reference was made to the great loss which the whole country had sustained by the passing of the Archbishop of Canterbury, whose radiant faith, high courage and deep sincerity made him a truly great Christian leader.

Praise for potatoes. I hear (writes Watchman) that the recent Wisbech "Dig for Victory" Exhibition had some notable features. One visitor, an American soldier, was particularly impressed by the potato section Gee! This is sure something to write about to the folks back home,' he said. He was particularly impressed when faced with the prize King Edward potatoes and he confessed that they even surpassed any that he had ever grown on his own farm in the States.

Golden wedding.—The inhabitants of the village (Bourn) extend their congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. George Mettinson, of Caxton End, who celebrated their golden wedding on October 31. They were married at Bourn church in 1894, and have always lived in the village.

Appeal for £75,000.—An appeal for £75,000, to be raised in seven years, to help the church in the diocese overcome some of the difficulties which are hindering its proper work, was made by the Bishop of Ely (Dr. Edward Wynn) at the Ely Diocesan Conference in the Guildhall (Cambridge) on Tuesday. The Bishop outlined some of the causes of the need for his Seven Years Plan, mentioning particularly the need for a living wage for all clergy, for action about over-large parsonages, for pensions, for new churches in Cambridge, and for training more people to teach religion under the new Education Act.

Sir Arthur Eddington F.R.S., Professor of Astronomy at Cambridge and Director of the Observatory here died in a nursing home during the night aged 66. From 1904 to 1913 he was Chief Assistant of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich relinquishing his post on his appointment as Plumian Professor of Astronomy at Cambridge. In 1914 he became Director of the Cambridge Observatory. He held degrees and honorary degrees at many well-known universities around the world and was created a Knight in 1938. His death came as a shock to a great many people. Sir Arthur was one of those sons of Cambridge whose fame extended the wide world over. His investigations into the more obtuse branches of astronomy and mathematics attracted widespread attention of scientists but over and above that his ability to translate his thoughts and reports into language intelligible to the layman meant that his books reached an unusually wide public. His actual work covered a remarkably wide field ranging from the internal constitution of the stars to the problems of the expansion of the universe and the whole philosophy of science. It was Sir Arthur who first confirmed the General Theory of Relativity propounded by Einstein by measuring the deflection of light during the solar eclipse in 1919 44 11 22, appreciation – 44 11 25

Strange moneybox. Coins (writes Watchman) had been found from time to time in curious places, but here is a mystery story of money in a queer place. A Cambridgeshire motorist recently acquired a new car, which had been laid up in a garage for some time. It had lamp masks, which the owner at once replaced with the latest type. One of the old masks, on being removed, rattled just like a child's moneybox, and sure enough, upon investigation of this unusual behaviour, the car owner found that the mask contained money — 17 rusty threepenny pieces. ,

To police office in rail truck. A goods wagon was used by a railwayman late one night to convey a suspected thief to the L.N.E.R. police, office at Cambridge, it was stated at Cambridge Borough Quarter Sessions, when a man was sent to prison for 21 months with hard labour. He was charged with stealing two cartons, containing cigarettes and shoes, together valued at £51 5s., the property of the L.N.E.R. The prosecution described how a railway policeman, on special duty at Coldham's Lane siding heard a noise coming from one of the wagons. He then saw the accused jump out of the wagon, and then stand on a carton, reach into the wagon, take another and put it on the ground beside the first one. As he was fastening the doors, the policeman arrested him.

Revived Ploughing match. — 'There was a number of specially interesting features at the highly successful ploughing match held at Cottenham last week by the Cottenham and District Ploughing Society—claimed to be oldest of its kind in the country. One feature remarked about was the fact that, here were 24 horse ploughs despite the growing increase of machinery, and another cause for comment was the large attendance of spectators—between 500 and 600, the largest crowd seen at the event for a great many years. Considerable interest, too, was centred in the newest type of plough, the "Auto-Culto," which takes the place of two horses. Messrs. Olivers' ploughman. Mr. P. Bowers, won a cup and two shields. The events in which he competed were open to ploughmen from all over England. It is not usual for three prizes to be won in the same match.

A "Bright" reply?—With barely 25 per cent of the street lights working, Ely Urban Council on Monday seemed agreed that there were certain "black spots" that needed attention (writes Watchman). Caution has been the lodestar in their deliberation on re-lighting the city and a member remarked ironically that somehow Cambridge seemed much brighter than Ely. The given answer was that there were more lights. Ely's "bright" reply was, of course, more lights—three of them. There are still 172 that can be lit.

"Stand down" parade. — The famous sward of Parker's Piece has been the scene of many historic ceremonies, but none, surely in what feelings of those taking part as principals or spectators have been so mixed as on Sunday, when Cambridge saw her own part in the great Home Guard "stand down". Centenary Celebrations. On April 1, 1844, the title deeds were signed of Madingley National School by which "all that piece or parcel of land being part of Pigs Close, situate in Madingley" was consigned to the vicar and churchwardens and their successors as a site for a school. Such a school was built in the year 1844, and last week its centenary was celebrated. On Thursday the present scholars invited their parents and the managers to an entertainment and afterwards tea, cigarettes and cakes were handed round. Later fall sat down to a wonderful spread arranged by Mrs. Ruddell, the headmistress. Games followed, and while these were going on the Bishop of Ely came along and joined in. On Saturday the managers invited all the old scholars and all the old teachers, with whom they could get into touch, to a tea and social evening. Some 50 sat down, the youngest of whom was 10 years of age and the oldest 84, with a sprinkling of 70's. Bishop Walsh was present on behalf of the Bishop of Ely.

Borough v County.—It looks very much to me (writes Watchman) as if the new Education Act Will provoke a first class "storm" between the Cambridge Town Council and the Cambs County Council. The cause of the impending trouble was officially revealed by the Deputy Mayor (Aid. W. L. Briggs) at last week's meeting of the Town Council. The core of the matter, I gather, is the fact that under the new Act a considerable amount of the Borough's educational facilities will be controlled by the County, and since Cambridge, educationally, is an exceptional place, and, because of the poor rateable value of the rural parts, the town has to find 75 per cent of all the County finances, Borough people feel that they, and not the County should be in control of their own affairs.

Alfred John Kester, Meadow Farm Cottages, Oakington Road, Histon, pleaded guilty to the theft of a sack containing about cwt. of tail wheat valued at 11s., the property of his employer, Sidney Smith Rowley. P.S. Fouracre, of Histon, gave evidence of stopping the defendant, whom he saw carrying a sack over the handlebar of his cycle. When questioned about what was in the sack, the defendant said it was wheat he had grown on his allotment. After further questioning, the witness asked if the wheat came from the farm and the defendant replied: "Let me take it back." The defendant had nothing to say in court about the matter, but his employer told the magistrates that his work was perfectly satisfactory and he was willing to keep him on. "I have given him a good talking to, and he has promised me it will never happen again," he said. A £2 fine was imposed.

It came to rest against two dwellings one of which was partly damaged and the other badly damaged. The occupier of one house, Mr. John Bellaire, was in a room when he heard a crash, and on going to the door he found that his bakehouse had been completely demolished and that a plane was standing in its place. One room was occupied by the Rural Land Utilisation Officer of the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries and the other by the Royal Commission on Historical Monuments and it was in this room that records of work done during the past three years were destroyed. The fire was discovered early in the morning by a porter and the college fire brigade were called out to deal with it until the arrival of the local N.F.S. The porter, Mr A. Jex said smoke was seen coming from the block and at first it was thought to be from a chimney. Then flames could be seen at the windows. Very heavy smoke which spread by communicating passages and stairways to the offices of the Ministry of Fuel and Power in an adjoining block was encountered by the N.F.S. but they succeeded in keeping the flames from spreading.Six fire appliances were in action and an oxygen breathing apparatus was also used in fighting the outbreak. "Chief Education Officer" was the title finally agreed upon by Cambs. County Council for Mr. Henry Morris, when the matter was raised on Saturday. The decision was made on a "compromise" resolution by Coun. Burkitt in view of their previous decision against "Director of Education". Coun. Hardman seconded the compromise which also found favour with the Chairman of the Education Committee. Coun. Ramsey (who moved the resolution against "Director" at the last meeting) thought this a great improvement but still preferred the word Secretary, owing to its historical and Parliamentary traditions "I should, suggest Secretary for Education" he commented. Dr Woodman seconded Counc Ramsey's amendment was lost and the Council then confirmed the title "Chief Education Officer"

Nicholls seconded. There was some discussion on the amendment which was finally carried by 23 votes to 20.

Kit store supervisor – When the gunners go to war from the Middle East the man in whose safekeeping they leave their most treasured possessions (writes a Military Observer) is Gunner Alfred Barrett, whose home is at 28 Hope Street, Mill Road: Cambridge. He is clerk and supervisor at the kit store of the Middle East, B.D.R.A., and the largest military kit store out there. At the present moment he is helping to look after the baggage of many regiments, and over 5,000 miscellaneous kits in addition. "Batches" of letters from home, photos, watches and 'civvy' clothing, is what the boys are most anxious should be kept safely for them," Gunner Barrett said recently. Before the war he was college porter at Downing College. Cambridge. He joined the Army in October. 1940, and went out to the Middle East in July. 1942. 'He has served with the 53rd A/Tank Regiment, but went to B.D.R.A when he was medically downgraded. He is married and has two daughters, Anne, aged ten and Judith, seven. His mother is Mrs A.W. Barrett of 22 Derby Street, Newnham, Cambridge

Health Service. An outline of some of the health services urgently needed in East Anglia was given yesterday by Dr. L. Banks, Regional Medical .Officer of Health for the Eastern region, speaking at a Red Cross training day in Cambridge. The first need, he said, was an extension of hospital services for the acute sick, then a good cancer and midwifery service, a chest surgical unit and chest and brain surgeons. "We want better clinics scattered in rural districts," he added, "more consultants, better laboratories and, lastly, an improved ambulance service, particularly in country districts." These things could only be got, he thought, by co-operation between interested parties. "You know who these parties are in East Anglia," he said. "The University, with their research facilities, the big voluntary hospitals, the local authorities and voluntary societies, of which your own is the leader. If all of you get together after the war, we shall get the services we need."

Soccer victory. Histon Institute reached the area final of the East Anglian Cup in which they will meet Cambridge, by winning the replay 6-4 with Newmarket at Histon on Saturday. The game opened at a fast pace and the Institute quickly opened the scoring through Kimpton. Within three minutes Knott added to the lead after Carlss had hit the bar The Newmarket defenders were finding it difficult to hold the fast moving Histon forwards, and after Brown had cleared off the goal line, Knott burst through the middle to score again. Then Newmarket began a series of rushes on the Histon goal and from one of these their inside right headed a neat goal. Play became more even, with both teams attacking in turn. Ten minutes from half-time Knott completed his hat-trick and almost from the restart Sanderson scored the Stutes fifth goal. Half-time: Histon 5 Newmarket 1. Newmarket took up the offensive in the second half, forcing Stephen, in the Stutes goal to make some fine saves, although he was well beaten by a good shot from the Jockeys' inside left. Within a minute Sanderson went through to score Histon's sixth goal. For a period the game slackened off. Newmarket then began to force the pace, and with the Stutes defence tiring scored two quick goals. Newmarket tried hard to level the scores, but were held, and the game ended with the Stutes on the attack.

A disused brickworks in Coldham's Lane, now serving as an Army motor cycle store was severely damaged by fire but only nine of the several hundred machines inside were affected. The glow of the fire, with occasional spurts of flame, could be seen from more than a mile away and the alarm was given to residents over a wide area. Many people gathered to watch the N.F.S. in action and willingly assisted in moving the motor cycles to safety. One of the helpers, Master Sidney Jones of 215, Newmarket Road, received cuts about the knees when the machine he was pushing fell against him, while two of the firemen were also slightly injured. An eye-witness praised the work of the firemen and member of the public in removing the motor cycles. "The back wheels of some of the cycles were blazing", he added, but there were soon extinguished with the aid of stirrup pumps and buckets of water. The cause of the outbreak is being investigated – 45 03 22c # c.45.7 c.34.75

Football. Willingham Juniors completed a double over Cottenham at Willingham on Saturday in the Cambs. Minor League. Willingham missed several good chances before Jeffrey flicked a loose ball into the net. Cottenham attacked, but finished badly, although towards the interval both goals had narrow escapes. In the second half Willingham had the balance of play. Jeffrey scored again with a splendid cross shot from a pass by King, and Few whipped in a third goal after a shot from Ingle had been blocked. Cottenham improved, but could not penetrate. Lee played well at full back for Cottenham. The final score was 3-0 to Willingham

G.P.O. Van Burnt. The N.F.S. were called out at, about tea time on Tuesday to deal with a G.P.O. engineer's van which caught fire, whilst standing in the Cambridge railway station yard. The man in charge of the van was Robert William Benton of 49 Great Eastern Street. Cambridge, and also with him was Ernest Napier, another employee of the G.P.O., who lives at 106, Thoday Street. The men were engaged on work connected with the railway, and it is thought that a blow lamp which was standing near blew up, and ignited the contents of the van. The N.F.S. quickly dealt with the fire, although the body of the van was burnt out. Both men attempted to put the fire out with extinguishers. Mr. Benton received burns to his right hand, and Mr. Napier singed eye brows and hair. Both men were given first aid by the Ambulance Division of the L.N.E.R.

Labour Meeting, — When the annual meeting of the Cambridgeshire Federation of Labour Parties was held in the Labour Hall, Norfolk Street, on Saturday, with Mr. Proctor in the chair, the secretary was directed to send to the American Ambassador a message of sympathy on the death of President Roosevelt. The isle of Ely Divisional Labour Party was admitted to the Federation. The meeting appointed the Hon. Mrs. Pease to represent the Federation at the forthcoming annual conference of the Labour Party at Whitsuntide, and decided to put down the following resolution for the conference agenda: This Conference deplores the failure of H.M. Government to make proper preparation for rebuilding Britain, both town and country; it regards the present initial programme of 300.000 houses as a woeful confession of impotence, and it calls upon H.M. Government to unify the building industry now in the same way that it organised the expansion of the aircraft industry in 1940. The Conference is convinced that only thus can the rebuilding of Britain go forward swiftly according to an orderly time-table based on our country's needs and carried out with regard to amenity, thus avoiding the waste, uncertainty, insufficiency and ugliness of haphazard speculative building. The annual report and accounts for 1944-5 were adopted, and the officers for 1945-6 were elected as follows: Chairman, Mr. T. Parsons: vice-chairman, Mr. Patterson, C.C.; Hon. Secretary, Mr. Pease.

Many of these have been completed successfully against heavily defended targets in Germany and enemy occupied territory. His high standard of resource and gallantry has enabled his crew to attain valuable results. Acting Squadron-Leader Farrell was born in 1917 at Hampstead, and his home is at Cherry Hinton, Cambs. He enlisted in December, 1939, and was commissioned in September, 1940. He was awarded the A.F.C. in 1944.

Corn Exchange boxing. A crowd of about 1,500 saw Eric Hall (Milton) bring off another of his spectacular wins at the Corn Exchange on Monday, when he knocked out John Newman (Cambridge) after the contest had been in progress one minute. The first time Hall connected he put Newman on the canvas. Newman was quickly sent' down" again and, on rising, was unable to keep Hall away. Hall brought the fight to an end with a perfect right to the chin. J. Ryan (Gloucester) beat W. Redit (Soham) on points. Ryan, using his reach to advantage, had the better of the first round. Next two rounds were fairly even, though Redit's general ship, took him out of a nasty situation. In the fourth round Redit carried the fight strongly, but Ryan was sound in defence. Ryan missed badly, but continued to have slightly the better of the exchanges, and he was awarded the decision after a very close contest. In the top-line contest, Jim Anderson (Waltham Cross) outpointed Marcel Ludavino (Free French Navy). Other results: Henry Maguire (Cambridge) beat Sgt. A.G. Norman Boon (Leicester) on points; L.A.C. Tommy Myers (R.A.F. and Leeds) beat Bill Haley (London) on points; Billy Boyd (Peterborough) knocked out Roy Pearmain (London) in the second round.

Cambridge's Spontaneous Celebration. Students, war workers and Servicemen celebrated the end of the European War in their own way at Cambridge last night. A crowd of several thousand gathered on the Market Square as dusk approached, singing, dancing, cheering, and to generally giving vent to high spirits. Later, as darkness fell, the waste paper dump in St. Mary's Passage became a bonfire, with several 'satellite' fires at other points on the square. It was a good humoured, noisy, cheerful show, and there was little sign of deliberate hooliganism. A few lamp glasses were smashed, and several stalls were damaged as the more agile' raggers' tried to use them as a grandstand. Several cars which have been left on the Hill also suffered through a similar cause. Not a few people waited on the Square earlier in the evening, expecting the Victory broadcast, and some mistook the practicing of bell ringers at Great St Mary's for a Victory peal. Cries of "We want the Mayor" went up later, when it became clear that there was to be no official celebration, but the crowd soon forgot that when a lively spirit climbed 60ft, to the top of the fountain steeple to plant the Union Jack , soon joined by the Red Flag and the Stars and Stripes. Cheers greeted the efforts. Later another daring individual was seen on the face of the illuminated Guildhall clock, 100 feet above the ground, putting the hands back.

Homemade 'thunder-flashes' and cracker-jacks added to the liveliness of the evening, but the numerous police on duty had nothing to do except prevent excessive exuberance. The Arts Theatre publicity trolley suffered from attempts to use it violently, but when it seemed as if injury was likely to people, police intervened and removed it. Spirits began to flag about midnight, and soon after all was quiet again 45 05 08, 45 05 10 # c.45.7

Reach Fair. — Even though we are in the midst of world-shaking events, the old tradition of proclaiming the opening of the Reach Fair was not neglected on Monday morning. The Mayor of Cambridge (Mr. G. Wilding), together with the Town Clerk (Mr. C. H. Kemp) and the Sergeant-at-Mace (Mr. W. H. Ingle), made the journey out to the village for the formal proclamation, which is the only remaining feature of the Fair, but though much of the old glory has gone, the children were still able to scramble for halfpennies. Lionel Edward Goodman, R.A.S.C., of Norwich, who, at the meeting of the County of Cambridge Liberal Association on Saturday, was adopted Liberal candidate for the County. The resolution was proposed by Mr. G. C. Fetch. It was seconded by Miss F, O. M Taylor, and supported by Mr. R. T. Howlett and others. "We soldiers who are here at home must make sure that when the other boys return again they will get the welcome they deserve— not with flags and music, but with houses, jobs, and freedom to live decent, happy lives," declared .Lieut. Goodman Above all, he said, we are out to fight for full employment in a free society. "I am incensed," he added, "by the way unemployment was allowed to rise to phenomenal proportions between the wars, bringing squalor, want, illness and lack, of houses in its trail." Lieut. Goodman has only just been released from the Services, and will shortly address his first public meeting. Arrangements for the forthcoming contest were fully discussed in a meeting of the Executive Committee prior to the adoption.

Inglis, F.R.S., lately Professor of Mechanical Sciences at Cambridge University, who becomes a Knight, and Mr. S. O. Chivers, a director of the Histon firm of Messrs. Chivers and Sons, who has been awarded the C.B.E. Well-known in Cambridge for his great interest in Addenbrooke's Hospital, Mr. S. O. Chivers receives the CBE as Hon. Technical Advisor to the Ministry of Food on Fruit and Vegetable Products. In 1942 he went to America for the Government on important work, and for this was attached to the British Food Mission. A member of the General Committee of Addenbrooke's, he is also chairman of the Maintenance Fund Committee.

Cambridgeshire Teachers met on Saturday at the Technical College by the kind invitation of the Principal, Mr. R. W. Wilson. Welcoming the assembly, he expressed his great pleasure in the close relations now established between the college and the County teachers. Several matters of interest were dealt with at the meeting. Miss Nan Youngman, county advisor on Art education, outlined a scheme to be considered by the Education Committee for the purchase by the committee of original contemporary works of art for circulation among the schools. She stressed that pictures chosen would be easily understood by children, and would have a realistic approach to the subject. It was important that children should appreciate the immense difference between original works and reproductions. Donations from schools would be welcomed, as well as gifts or loans from interested persons. Mr. P. J. Walling, reporting the matter of the attendance of children at public dance halls, said that the County Youth Organisations Committee was to be asked to deal with the problem. Recent discussions of the Joint Advisory Committee were also considered, and the secretary reported that an individual record card, which would assist materially in the difficult matter of selecting children of the three new types of secondary schools had been finally approved, and referred to the Education Committee for adoption. Mr, Walling was warmly congratulated on his work as secretary of the teachers' panel during the committee's first year.

Balloons Command started operations in 1937 and by the end of 1940 there were 2,400 balloons forming a dense belt to the South and East of London. They were also used for the production of many of our large towns; were flown over Normandy beaches and played an important part in guiding our shipping. In 1940 the difficult in the supply of hydrogen acute, due to the increasing enemy action and the Ministry decided to invite the co-operation of the gas industry. Cambridge Gas Company were approached as to facilities which were available such as blue water gas and steam or existing plant such as purifiers and gasholders. Cambridge was one of 19 sites selected were plant for the production of large quantities of water has and steam were available and the production of hydrogen started early 1942. The high standard attained in the production of hydrogen resulted from experimental work, much of which was carried out at the Cambridge Gas Works. It producing enough gas for 8,000 balloons. When news was received that enemy aircraft had been brought down over an East Anglian city by balloons filled with hydrogen manufactured in the Cambridge plant there was much jubilation among the personnel. The original fillings, and the maintenance of the large number of balloons required for the flying bomb barrage imposed a severe strain on the country's hydrogen production system and the output of the Cambridge plant was stepped up to 2½ times its normal capacity. Many people have wondered what the loads of long round steel cylinders contained which were frequently borne on large trailers through the town and now the facts are revealed, Cambridge has learned of yet another vital contribution to the national war effort which was made by a local company. Supplying gas for inflating balloons is no new experience for the Cambridge Gas Company. Many will remember the ascents made from Midsummer Common before the last war and the required has was supplied from the Newmarket Road works by a main specially aid for the purpose. An inquest heard that a 37-year old woman had been shot through the heart by a sentry at the American camp in Milton Road, Cambridge after she persistently disregarded his challenges. The sentry said he saw somebody coming down the road from inside the camp at 4.40 a.m. and when the person got closer, found she was a woman. He stepped out into the road and called out 'Halt' but she did not stop, got right up to him and was walking by. He asked what she was doing the depot area at that time of the morning, and she replied that she had spent the night in the camp. He told her she did not belong in the camp and ordered her off the post. The woman started swearing at him, calling him foul names, and advanced towards the sentry box, saying she wanted to get warm. He again ordered her off the post and when she still insisted on going to the box, told her she did not belong to it. She turned towards the sentry. He warned her not to come any closer. She paid no attention. He loaded his rifle and fired. Barn Fire. The barn at the Manor House, Papworth St. Agnes, which was used as a Dance Hall, was practically gutted in a fire which broke out there early on Monday, shortly after midnight. It quickly got a hold, spreading to an adjoining garage, and both buildings were well alight when the Cambridge N.F.S. arrived on the scene. The roof and walls of both collapsed and a car inside the garage was severely damaged. The N.F.S. was there all night and, tackling the blaze with water tenders, soon had the fire under control and prevented it from spreading further.

"I thank him for his courtesy and the ungrudging help he gave me," said Mr. Pryor, "and I also thank him on your behalf." In wishing Mr. Tabrum good luck in his retirement, the chairman remarked: "I feel quite sure that your wife will be only too glad to have a little more of your time than she has had in the past 32 years." Capt. R.-S. Hicks seconded the motion, and Mr. Tabrum, in reply, expressed thanks for what had been said, and added that the office of Clerk of the Peace was one he had always been proud to hold.

H. Wooll. The Finance Committee, who have been considering the applications, report that of 27 candidates who applied for the post, the Special Committee interviewed eight, including the Deputy County Accountant (Mr. R. P. Thorne), and they will put before the council for final choice three of the eight —again including Mr. Thorne. The Clerk will also report to the council the resignation of Ald. A. R. Cambs League. — Left about 100 minutes to get 166 to beat New Chesterton Institute, in the Cambs League on Saturday, Marshall's just failed to beat the clock, being 14 runs behind, with three wickets intact at the call of time. Feature of the Institute's innings of 153 for nine declared was the display of B. Arnold, who made 78 (including 10 fours) before being seventh out at 142. Half the side were out for 53, but B. Bull helped to add 75 for the seventh wicket. S. Kirby, who secured five of the wickets for 28, was top scorer for Marshall's with 46 (five fours). J. Peel, who hit a six and three fours, in his 26, was his partner in a second wicket stand of 64, and later B. Brown hit out, having two sixes and three fours in an unbeaten 40. Bowling unchanged for 19 overs, Bull took four wickets for 46 runs.

The association between the people of Cambridge and the men and women of the Eighth. U.S. Air Force was marked with an historic ceremony when the Honorary Freedom of Cambridge was conferred upon members of the force. The principle part in the ceremony took place in the Market Square decked with flags and banners when the mayor of Cambridge Councillor George Wilding presented to Major General William E Kepner, Commanding Officer of the Eighth Air Force, an oak casket containing the scroll formally recording the council's resolution. In reply General Kepner asked the Mayor to accept an Eighth Air Force shield to be housed in the Guildhall in commemoration of the occasion. Large crowds who had assembled on the Market Square in brilliant summer weather were entertained by massed American and R.A.F. bands as the many distinguished visitors arrived. Crowds began to gather long before proceedings were due to start and hundreds of business people and others found windows overlooking the square a first-class viewpoint. Apart from the markers the first on parade were contingents of the RAF and the WAAF. The Mayor said the Honorary Freedom was the greatest distinction that can be awarded. He gave an assurance that any member of the American Eighth Air Force of whatever rank who may return in the future to visit us here will always receive a special welcome from the people of Cambridge. "It seemed but a very short time ago that the people with Cambridge listened to the first rumours of the arrival of U.S.A. airmen. Then rumour became fact and they found themselves watching the assembly of more and more well-equipped men and more and more wonderful machines, both air-borne and earthbound. The First Air Division, which comprised the forces in more immediate contact with Cambridge established their headquarters in Brampton in June 1942. It was Cambridgeshire's privilege to provide a site for the last resting place of those of the Force who died in the cause of freedom. The wives parents and other relatives of those who will not return may in time find some comfort in knowing that the Cemetery is situated upon what is considered to be the most beautiful hill in the neighbourhood of Cambridge. In Cambridge, their chief leave town, the Americans have endeared themselves to us by their heroism, their understanding and their great generosity. And above all the great love they have shown to our children". In replying General Kepner said that Cambridge had been a tremendous source of inspiration for them. And even greater inspiration came from the people. "During this war time, when you were least prepared to offer us hospitality, you shared with us that you had. All of us have made real lasting friends in Cambridge. And now we are Honorary Citizens of Cambridge I promise you that many of us will return from time to time in the future, reliving our memories and revisiting our friends." – 45 08 02, a & b Crowds celebrate 45 08 03 # c.45.7 # c.35.7

Bowls. Cambs. registered their first win of the season by defeating Norfolk by 13 shots at Chesterton on Saturday. The Lord Lieutenant (Capt. R. G. Briscoe, patron of the Cambs. Association) paid a visit to the green and was introduced to many of the players on both sides. The green was fast and in fine condition. Cambs. made a good start. They gained a lead of 19 after five ends, the score then reading 37-18, and bowled steadily throughout, being up on four rinks. Scores: at 10 ends 61-47, 15 ends 91-74, final score 121-108.

Heroic Seamen. The W.V.S. have been asked to organise a Seamen's Flag Day in Cambridge in aid of King George's Fund for Sailors, the Missions to Seamen and the Royal National Lifeboat Institution, "in token of gratitude for the heroism and devotion of our seamen in bringing vital supplies in the face of the utmost peril," writes the Mayor. "I sincerely hope that Cambridge will make every effort to make this a success. No-one in these days has much time to spare, but if all combine to help, this effort can be carried through without throwing too much of a burden on the shoulders of one or two." .

Angling. — An Ely competitor, Mr. L. He had a "bag" of 151b 12oz 6dr comprising -mainly of bream. There were 62 competitors, of whom 18 weighed in fish totalling 791b loz 2dr. Bream formed the bulk of the catches, but there was nothing of exceptional size. Several .others caught fish in a match which, contrary to the Society's custom, was "all in." Runner up was Mr. W. Marshall, jun., with 10 lb 8oz 4dr, and other placings were: 3 Mr. E, Newman, 71b 3oz. 4 Mr. L. Parr, 61b 8oz 2dr, 5 Mr. D.

How Cambridge heard the great victory news. The Prime Minister's broadcast came after most people in Cambridge had gone to bed, feeling confident no doubt that the news of Japan's surrendered would not be made known until this morning at the earliest. Nevertheless, a lot of people, including students did hear Mr. Atlee's announcement. But although some went out into the streets and others set off fireworks, there was no large scale merrymaking.
A Cambridge Daily News reporter who went to Market Hill immediately after the broadcast found half a dozen undergraduates busily engaged in starting a small bonfire on one corner of the Square. Shortage of suitable fuel that made their task difficult and they began to cast covetous glances at the wood of the market stalls. But the timely arrival of a police officer prevented any damage being done and the fire eventually died a natural deaths.
Next morning, the loudspeaker cars toured the town announcing the declaration from the Guild Hall at noon of the news. But sometime before then, crowds gathered waiting for the announcement. It was the VE-Day all over again on Market Hill. Once again all roads lead to the Square. As on that other memorable occasion, they started to collect early and by 9:30, there was a fair number. More and more collected as the morning went on and the hundreds soon grew into thousands, many of them large family parties, the children carried shoulder high and not realizing the significant of the event. Union Jacks, rosettes, paper hats another patriotic favours carefully cherished for this occasion from the other one were well in evidence, and the people waited patiently, the wait enlivened by a few bangers and listening to stirring martial music from the loud speakers. The windows of the shops and offices on the square were again framed with people getting what you call a bird's eye view, as they waited for the historic declaration by the Mayor - 45 08 15

Combined Parade. Cambridge was well presented on Sunday at Bury St Edmunds when 1,500 troops of the Suffolk Regt., the Beds, and Herts. Regt., the A.T.S., and the General Service Corps, together with members of the 4th Cadet Batt., Suffolk Regt. took part in a combined parade. The occasion was the commemoration of Minden Day and Blenheim Day. At the Battle of Minden on August 1, 1759, the 12th Foot (the Suffolk Regt.) picked roses as they pursued the retreating French, while the Battle of Blenheim — August 13, 1704—is one of the battle honours of the Bedfordshire and Hertfordshire Regiment. There were several old veterans on parade among them being Lieut. Mr. William Taylor, of Cheveley, near Newmarket, who is 80 years old, and who holds the Hazara. In command of the parade was Lieut-Col. G. A. Anstee, M.C., commanding No. 3 Infantry Training Centre, and as they were brought on parade, the .colours of both regiments, those of the Suffolk Regiment being the oldest in the British Army, were received with the royal salute, for which the bands of both regiments played. The service was conducted by the Archdeacon, of Sudbury, the Ven. H. R, Norton, formerly Assistant, Chaplain General Eastern Command, and the Rev. J O. V Hogarth, Chaplain to No 3 I.T.C., and the lessons were read by Col Nicholson and Brigadier Foss. Afterwards, there was the impressive ceremony of trooping the colours of the Suffolk Regiment, and the Bedfordshire and Hertfordshire Regiment which were then formed up for the troops, cadets and old soldiers to march past. The ceremony, which took place at Gibraltar Barracks, was watched by a large gathering of townspeople.

Royal Shopper. — People who happened to be in St. Andrew's Street about noon yesterday had the pleasure of seeing Queen Mary, who paid a private shopping visit to Mr. Stanley Woolston's antique shop. Before Her Majesty arrived, there was only a handful or more people in the vicinity of the shop, but as her car drew up outside, the crowd rapidly grew and people pressed forward to catch a glimpse of the distinguished visitor, Queen Mary, who attended by Lady Cynthia Colville, from Sandringham, wore a pretty powder blue frock, a white coat with a large white fur collar and a small white hat. She wore pearl and diamond earrings. As Her Majesty re-entered the car later, the cheers and clapping went up from the crowds, and many people ran behind the car to get a last view of her as she drove for Exning. # c.02

Cricket.—Strong batting put Cambs. in a good position at Fenner's on Saturday, but their bowling, apart from a brilliant short spell by Trapnell, was not powerful enough to get the better of the Beds. batsmen. Cambs. were given a fine send-off by Coots and Taylor, who put on 110 in 98 minutes before Coote was caught in the gully for 61, which included nine 4's. Taylor reached his 50 just before lunch, and he and Sunshine added 78 before Taylor was bowled for 73, in which were a five and eight 4's. Sunshine and Ridgeon attacked the bowling, and the total had gone to 236 when Ridgeon was caught at deep square leg for 40, half of which came in fours. A lively partnership by Sunshine and Trapnell increased the score to 296 before the innings was declared, Sunshine's sparkling 87 not out included eight fours.

Atomic Energy. Sir Lawrence Bragg, Cavendish Professor of Experimental Physics at Cambridge, took an optimistic view of the recent development of atomic energy, when he gave a broadcast talk on Sunday night. We were at the beginning, he said, of one of the epochs when the whole structure of human society underwent vast change and reorganisation. .epochs which came at long intervals, measured in tens or hundreds of thousands of years. He joined with the optimists who thought that the inevitable end of our scientific and technical achievements was a world welded into one unit.

The Royal visitors were Prince Sachie Salassie, the 15-year-old son of the Emperor, and Prince Alexander Desta, aged 11, a son of the Emperor's daughter. They arrived at Trinity at midday, where they were received by Mr. A. With Dr. Hele and Mrs. Hele at the lunch were Mr. Zaude (Secretary of the Ethiopian Ministry in London), Professor Jevons (English

Now it can be Told - More about Cambridge Air Raids; some remarkable escapes; bombs which failed to explode.
There is a large book in the Guildhall which might be placed in Library as a reminder of what air warfare meant to Cambridge. It is a large book which lists the total casualties (about 30 people killed and 70 hurt), the damage (51 houses demolished and 1,271 less badly damaged) and that the 424 official 'alerts', plus one or two false alarms. It also tells the story of some amazing escapes. One tells of an old lady in the Rock Estate district who heard whistles for the first time during an incendiary raid. One warden, busily engaged in dislodging an incendiary bomb from the roof of the branch library told her 'We've got a football match on'.
No resident needs reminding of the first raid on June 19th 1940 when 10 people were killed by two bombs on Vicarage Terrace. But few are aware than some 10 weeks previously 11 High Explosive bombs were aimed at Cambridge but fell in sugar beet fields on the outskirts of the town, causing damage only to crops. One night in August eight h.e.s were dropped on different parts of town, including Fenners and on August 26th another eight fell, one failing to go off. This fell a few feet from a house at the end of Leys Avenue, stripping wallpaper, but without harming the people in the house. Some other bombs fell in Pemberton Terrace and Shaftesbury Avenue, damaging houses. Then on October 15th one person was killed when a single bomb fell in Barrow Road.
1941 was the worst year for bombing. On January 18th, a bitter, icy night when pipes were frozen, raiders dropped some 100 incendiary bombs in the vicinity of Hyde Park Corner, damaging the Perse School. A fortnight later Mill Road Bridge was attacked, damaging two cottages. Two lost their lives and 10 others were injured. On February 15th a bomb fell in front of a house in Cherryhinton Road but all eight occupants of the building escaped. Then on 24th a sharp attack resulted in the deaths of 11; incendiaries were dropped in the Cherryhinton Road district, two h.e.s made a direct hit on a house in Grantchester Meadows killing two women. Then a whole batch of bombs and incendiaries fell in the Hills Road area, wardens and firewatchers were caught in the streets while other people were injured in their homes. A more determined attack with fire bombs was made on May 9th when hundreds of incendiaries were showered in the area between Hills Road and Trumpington Road. Fifty houses received direct hits but resulting fires were put out with stirrup pumps and sand. Two houses in Great Eastern Street, Romsey Town were hit by 10 h.e.s. on August 29th causing two deaths but the fact that it was a pouring wet night – something newspapers were not allowed to report at the time – was responsible for the complete absence of casualties when a 'stick' of high-explosives and incendiaries fell in Huntingdon Road.

Ten months elapsed before the next raid, then on July 28th 1942 a single low-flying raider straddled the Bridge Street – Sidney Street area with 11 high-explosives and many incendiaries. It was in this raid that the Germans made first use of their new explosive incendiary bombs, one of which caused the big fire at the Union Society. Three people were killed and seven injured, 10 buildings were demolished or rendered so unsafe they had to be pulled down, and 127 other properties damaged. The results would have been much worse but for the fact that three of the h.e.s failed to explode. One fell through the roof of a house in Portugal Place and came to rest on the hearth immediately above a basement where residents were sheltering. One lodger who was still in bed awoke to see a bomb sticking through the party wall! High explosives and incendiary bombs were used again on August 7th when Chesterton and the Stourbridge Common area were hit. The h.e.s were of the 250 k.g. type and incendiaries numbered about 700. Again both damage and casualties were light.
The last raid of the war to affect Cambridge occurred over 12 months later, on November 5th 1943, when two high explosive bombs of small calibre fell off Milton Road, causing damage to a house but no personal injuries. The rest of the 'stick' fell in Histon.
Cambridge was fortunate enough to escape all flying bombs, although their ominous drone was heard low over the roof-tops on quite a number of occasions. Similarly no rocket bombs landed within the Borough boundaries. In the county, week after week bombs were dropped but almost always they fell on open ground. From over 1,600 high-explosive bombs, seven parachute mines, 10,000 incendiaries, five fly-bombs and one rocket, the total civilian casualties were only three killed and 23 injured. Service men suffered during the attacks on aerodromes, but details of casualties were not made known to Civil Defence authorities. It may now be stated that five fly-bombs fell at Melbourn, Burwell, Castle Camps, West Wickham and Heydon when one fell close to the spot where in 1940 a bomb had damaged the church. Only one rocket fell in Cambridgeshire – at Fulbourn. Also in the county five raiders were brought down at Balsham, Orwell, Westwick, Oakington, Cheveley and Litlington – 45

Part of the War-time story of the Fitzwilliam Museum was revealed to members of the Cambridge Women's Luncheon Club. It was felt that the walls of the original building might not stand up against blast and that the roof were not easy for firewatching. In August 1939 work was begun on a scheme of air raid precautions. The most important works of art sent to a private house in Wales and a bank in Cornwell. Many valuable pieces of pottery and porcelain were stored in a cave which after a time was found to be damp. The rest was packed and stored in the best protected parts of the Museum and measures taken to defend the building against incendiary bombs and the effects of blast and splinters with a small air raid shelter for visitors constructed in the basement. There were applications from societies in London to store books and furniture but this seemed a foolish idea since they themselves were sending things away. They did however store blankets and other Red Cross property in one of the downstairs rooms. Part of the Museum was wanted by the R.A.F. as a training room to install the apparatus by which cadets becoming pilots were given the illusion things were flying at them and of the sky whirling about them when they were sitting firm and motionless. But while the Courtauld Galleries might have been excellent for the purpose, it was likely that the floors and walls would have suffered very serious damage from the setting up of the machinery necessary and the amount of traffic which would have followed. The request was never pressed home. The Museum reopened in part in March 1940 with a range of exhibitions which attracted numerous visitors who were grateful for the refreshment of mind which they got from their visits. Shortly after VE-Day the Museum closed for ten days to re-arrange and re-hang all the rooms. The evacuated works of art had to be received back and the upper galleries put into beautiful order. The lower floors had to be kept shut because time was needed to unpack and clean the smaller objects but all of the departments will be opened in time 45 09 17b # c.45.7 # c.03

Tool Shed Fire. Fire broke out in a tool-shed at the rear of 37 Windsor Road, Cambridge, in the early hours of Saturday. The Cambridge Section of the N.F.S. received the call at 4 a.m. and, using the hose reel, had the outbreak under control in less than half an hour. The shed, which was used as a workshop, was only slightly damaged. The cause of the fire is not yet known 45 09 21

Post Office Supervisor. The night telephone staff of Cambridge Exchange gathered to tea at Thurston's Cafe, St. Andrew's Street, to bid farewell to Mr A. F. Hornsby, a night supervisor, who has, apart from his service in the Great War been, with the Post Office since 1899. Many tributes were paid to him during the evening, and among those who spoke were the Head Postmaster (Mr. J. W. Berry)), the telephone manager (Mr. H. R. Jones), the chief superintendent (Mr, G, W. Harding), and representatives of the supervising and manipulative staffs. Mr. Hornsby has borne a full share of the added responsibilities which have resulted from war-time conditions, and each of the speakers made a special point of acknowledging his valuable services in this connection. To conclude the proceedings, the Head Postmaster presented Mr. Hornsby with a cheque and a suitably inscribed, parchment, which has been contributed by his colleagues as a mark of their regard for him both as a supervisor and as a member of the staff had described him, a very real friend.

Spartan League. Benefiting from their previous games, Cambridge Town gave a capital display to win their opening Spartan League match at Hatfield on Saturday by five goals to one. It was Hatfield's first season, and their lack of practice was evident, particularly in their finishing efforts. Town had changed from the previous week. Ferris was unable to play owing to an injury, and R. Taylor, home on leave, came in at centre forward, where he showed good form. He was quickly off the mark and his first time shooting was generally accurate as his three goals testify. On the right wing Haylock showed some useful touches and took his chances well. He was kept well in the game by Evans, whose passing was accurate. Barnard did the purveying in his customary manner and used the cross pass to advantage, while J. Gallego showed good speed and centred well.

The first two Cambridge ex-prisoners from the Far East are back home again. They arrived late on Saturday night after being flown from India. The men are Private James Craft, First Battalion Cambridgeshire Regiment. Son of Mr. and Mrs. P.B Craft of Holbrooke Road, and Private Morris Foreman of the Royal Norfolks, son of Mrs. E. Foreman of Burleigh Street. Both of them seem surprisingly fit and cheerful after their long ordeal. Private Craft was taken prisoner in Singapore in 1942 and during his captivity was in about 29 different camps in Burma and Siam. “I had a pretty rough passage”, he told a reporter, “and at one time, my weight was down to six stone. But I am now getting back to normal” . Released on August 31st, he said that since then life had been like a dream. “Everyone, everywhere has been almost too good to us. But words cannot describe my feelings when at last, I got out of the train on Cambridge Station”. Conditions in the bigger camps were fairly comfortable, but in the jungle things were not so good. “Our food consisted mainly of rice. I couldn’t look a rice pudding in the face again. Yet the first meal, they gave us when we reached England included a rice sweet. I didn’t eat that”, he said– 45 09 25 # c.45.7

Orders for victory handbells, made from scrap metal from shot down German aircraft, are flowing in thick and fast at the Cambridge Gas Company's showroom, Mr. Stanley Miller, the hon. organiser, tells us. The bells, which are being sold in aid of the R.A.F. Benevolent Fund, are seven inches high and are made at labour cost by a Kentish firm. Some of them have been photographed by Battle or Britain pilots. One of them, personally cast by Group Capt. Douglas Bader, the famous legless flyer, will be sold at Cambridge in the near future to the highest bidder. So far over 70.000 bells have been sold in Britain alone. America has bought 20,000 of them. The metal for the bells comes from a scrap dump at Biggin Hill and was given by the Ministry of Aircraft Production.

Malayan Examinations. One of the-last things that many children in Malaya did before the Japanese invasion in 1941 was to take the examination for the Cambridge School Certificate. Now, after a lapse of nearly four years, the office of the Examination Syndicate in Cambridge has received a cable from Singapore inquiring about the results of that examination. An official of the Syndicate told the "Press and Chronicle" that most of the scripts from Malaya arrived safely but from Penang and two other places only portions were received. A statement of the results of the examinations has been prepared and will be delivered to the waiting candidates. Those who were only able to complete part of the examination will be allowed to take their other paper now without additional fee. Before the war an average of about 4,000 candidates took the Cambridge School Certificate examination on the Far East - most of them being Malayans and Chinese.

Narrow escape. The Earl of Rosebury narrowly escaped serious injuries when his car, which he was driving, overturned near Duxford Aerodrome on Sunday afternoon. A back wheel came off while the car was travelling at about 50 miles per hour. The car somersaulted twice, and Lord Rosebury was pitched through the canvas run roof into some barbed wire. He was bruised and cut, but otherwise unhurt when the Duke of Norfolk, who was in a following car, picked him up and brought him on to Newmarket. Lord Rosebery was travelling from Mentmore to Newmarket. His car was completely wrecked.

Road accidents. — The return of road accidents in Cambridge during September, snows that one person, a pedal cyclist, was killed during daylight. Three people, two of them cyclists, were seriously injured in daylight while another cyclist was seriously hurt, after dark. The "slightly injured" numbered three at night and 23 during the day. Of the latter, eight were pedestrians (three under 15 years of age), and 12 were cyclists.

Cambridge Town made a comfortable advance in the F.A. Cup on Saturday, when they beat a strong King's Lynn side by a comfortable margin. The visitors hard throughout, but never looked like getting the better of the Town, who were superior both in offensive and defensive work. The leading light in the Town forward line was Fessis, who playing centre forward this time once again turned in a cracker- jack performance. He was well supported by his inside men, Allen and Barnard, the latter being as reliable as ever Allen started off a little shakily, but soon settled down and put in some nice constructive work. The wingers Gallegro and Rose, were competent, but not outstanding. The halves were again sound. Evans, making his second appearance at right half, showed a pleasing improvement over his previous display, while Saddington at centre half, and Trevett, on the left, were consistent stumbling blocks to the Lynn forwards. At full back Harmer and Wren were in great form. Gallego, in goal, did all that was required of him. For King's Lynn, Elfett and High were the chief dangers in the forward line. Silfs was a hard-working centre half, ably backed up by A. C. Ward, Moore and Woodhouse, while Havers and Fakenbridge - the latter a well-known pre-war visitor - struggled gamely at full back. Brown had plenty to do between the posts and made some good saves. In the third round, Town visit Wisbech, who defeated Newmarket 5-0 at Wisbech.

Mr. George Isaacs, in reply, said: "I would, refer the Hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hallam on 9th October, a copy of which I am sending him. The reply referred to by Mr. Isaacs was as follows: "Considerable assistance has been, given to agriculture by the loan of Service labour to help with harvesting and by the grant to leave to agricultural workers. House of Commons. In the House of Commons on Monday, the Member of Cambridge (Major Leslie Symonds) asked the President of the Board of Trade what were the figures of exports from this country to the U.S.S.R. in 1938; what they are now; and what steps are being taken to stimulate trade between this country and the U.S.S.R. Sir Stafford Cripps replied: "Total exports to the U.S.S.R (including re-exports) were valued at £17,000,000 in 1938. The annual rate for this year is about £34,000,000. I am most anxious to stimulate trade between ourselves and the U.S.S.R., and I am prepared to discuss the future basis of trade between the two countries as soon as the authorities of the Soviet Union are ready."

Ploughing Match. A ploughing match of the Sawston District Young Farmers' Club and the Hinxton, Ickleton and Duxford Ploughing Society was held on land belonging to Messrs. A. Home and L. The competitors found ploughing difficult, as the ground was hard. Refreshments on the field were provided by the president, Mr. I, Howe. The event was followed by a ploughmen's supper in the Sawston Village College, the principal guests at which were Mrs. Bowen, who has always taken an interest in agricultural activities in the district, and who presented the prizes; Mr. Howe, Mr S. A. Taylor, Mr. J. A. McMillan, Mr. Tangney and Mr. Marr, Mr. W. L. Wood was toastmaster, and a number of toasts were proposed and replied to. Cambridge Town returned to winning form on Saturday, when they defeated Welwyn Garden City by five goals to one. Ken Wright, George Ferguson and Eddie Collins came into the side, together with George Dean, and the result was an effective team. Welwyn were triers to the end, but the Town deserved their win. Although once laid out, A Gallego kept goal well and showed good judgment in coming out to clear. At right back Overhill did very well, keeping a clever winger in check and kicking well, while Wren did his job with his usual enthusiasm. Dean showed he is still a fine half-back, and he tackled well. Saddington had his hands full frequently, but used his head and feet grandly. Parr completed a good middle line, his use of the ball showing improvement. On the right wing, Collins did some clever things, combined well and centred accurately. Barnard, changed to inside right, worked well throughout. Ferguson used the ball cleverly, bringing all the forwards into the game. Ken Wright dribbled and schemed cleverly. Rose combined neatly with Wright and was always trying to make ground-in the Welwyn goal, Blowers had plenty of work which he did well, while Rees and Brady were steady backs. Farr was a consistent half, his use of the ball being clever, and Gilbert until injured, defended well, while North also tried hard. Of the forwards, Verlander and Hurst worked hard, and O'Brien. Hums and Mullen played neatly, but the whole line should keep the ball moving quicker.

The Commandant of the Special Constabulary was killed and the Cambridgeshire Chief Constable, W.H. Edwards together with three other officers were injured when the car in which they were travelling was involved in a head-on collision with an armoured vehicle at Melbourn. The impact was so violent that the police car was wrecked and the armoured car overturned. Three other officers sustained injuries. Mr Edwards is very ill indeed (he died a few days later). At an inquest the driver of the armoured vehicle said he was part of a convoy of 13 vehicles. They had been told not to exceed 30 m.p.h. and to travel 60 yards apart. On rounding a bend he was dazzled by the undipped lights of a car. He sounded his siren – which was similar to that of American speed cops – and slowed down. He heard a tinkle and found the glass from his driving mirror was missing. He felt no impact but looking back he saw another of the 'Staghounds' on the grass verge and smoke rising and realised there had been an accident – 45 11 16; W.H. Cambridge's big contribution to war was the housing of troops based here; War Office acquired empty houses for troops. This was better than billeting them in private houses. Army huts in Trumpington Road have been partially taken over by people in need of a home. Of the 21 huts in the camp, at least seven were occupied this morning. The other 14 were locked by Military Police in an attempt to stop squatters getting in. The first squatter to arrive was Mr Allen who staked his claim last night in a hut complete with partitions and a telephone. He said "We read about the Hills Road huts, but when we got there they were all taken. So two or three of us decided to come round here. We didn't move in, but marked our places. A Civilian came up and tried to put us off by saying that the water was bad, and added that some officers were to move in. This morning we arrived properly". A Lieutenant in the Military Police, told that a woman with a baby was going round the camp looking for a hut, put two Military Police behind her to prevent her from entering one. A villi policeman on motor cycle patrol, was requested by the officer to ask the lady to leave. This he did, but added that it was all we was empowered to do. A Military Policeman said they had no ruling on the matter and could not eject them. An open hut was found for the lady and she was quickly installed, together with a chair. Some of the huts bore chalked inscriptions, a number of them "Isolation Ward", and those not occupied by squatters were completely empty. Another hut bore the word 'Danger, booby traps". Two huts containing live ammunition were left well alone by the squatters. All huts are wired up for electricity and the water is supplied from the town main. A Military Policeman said they were not ideal for winter conditions. They could be very cold, especially in the morning when the frost was about. The reason for the huts being empty was given by another soldier. The soldiers who had been living in them had been billeted outside to make room for the garrison engineer and staff who would soon have to move out of requisitioned house next door – 46 09 06 # c.45.7 # c.23

General Eisenhower and Field-Marshall Montgomery visited Cambridge today – but this time there was no cloak of secrecy such as covered their previous visit over two years ago. Then – it was in March 1944 – they had come to do some of the final planning for D-Day. Today they came to be honoured for the victory which had brought us out of the dark days of war. They came each to receive the honorary degree of Doctor of Law. Monty's Rolls-Royce glided by the crowd almost unrecognised until reaching St Mary's Street, when a cheer went up. They were on the watch after that and when General Eisenhower arrived in a camouflaged Packard, followed by three other cars, a big cheer went up. As the two walked through the Old Schools to take their place in the procession Monty noticed a group of men from Coulson's, the builders (who are doing some repair work there); he grinned cheerfully, waved and said 'Good morning' to them. Inside the Senate House the Public Orator in presenting General Eisenhower said "It is pleasant to recall that this is not the first that this great man has visited our town. It can now be revealed that over two years ago on a dark night in spring the Union Society buildings stood closed and empty. Armed sentries stood at the doors to bar unauthorised entry. When all was prepared certain vehicles stole through our streets and halted at the threshold. Mysterious packages were carried within whose nature remains sealed from the profane. In short, the Supreme Commander was expected, and here with the aid of those mystic chests he and his most intimate helpers put the finishing touches to their plans before letting loose the thunderbolts of justice on the fortified coasts across the channel. Of Field-Marshal Montgomery he said: "It would be superfluous to try and recall the magnificent deeds … Before Alamein we survived; after Alamein we conquered … We know his father when at Trinity performed the almost unexampled feat of clearing the Hall steps at one leap. He was the son of a Trinity man and (as we all hope) the father of another" – 46 10 11, 11a # c.45.7

A court heard that if an aircraft brought to Marshalls was found to be beyond economical repair it was certified to be broken up and taken to the salvage buildings. There was a list of certain component parts that had to be salvaged if they were in order. If they were not they were put out with the rest of the aircraft and a hammer was put through the face of them, they were put on the salvage dump, then taken away and dumped in a disused pit.
A clock was one of a number of articles usually taken from aircraft and the accused had put one from a Dakota it in a cupboard and forgotten about it. Several months later it has been found, the glass was broken and the works were not in order. He had offered it to a man for £5, then accepted thirty shillings.Police later visited the man's home in connection with another matter and noticed the clock standing on a bedroom mantelpiece. They also saw a bicycle standing in the halls which had been reported as missing by another member of the firm.The men were found guilty and fined £10 each. One had won the B.E.M. during the war for putting out fire in main hangar – 46 10 19 # c.27.1 : Marshalls # c.45.7

Centenary King's Lynn to Ely railway line commemorated; owing insufficient capital for Ely-Huntingdon line the project abandoned and only a short length build from St Ives station to terminus on Old North Road, Huntingdon. Failed to pay. East Anglian Company then built a vehicle to convey 60 passengers drawn by horse ridden by postilion with some outside seats for passengers. Housewives are dealt yet another blow today. Cambridge University & Town Waterworks Company will reluctantly be compelled to close down the water softening plant at Cherry Hinton. Cambridge's water will then be about twice its present hardness. There have been drastic reductions in the coal required to evaporate the brine at the salt works in Cheshire. Mr Philip Porteous, managing director of the company told a reporter "The Government takes the view that water softening is one of those amenities without which we can manage in times of crisis, but we appreciate only too well the difficulties of the housewife in these days of soap rationing"

Between 60 and 70 persons were in an upstairs room when the Falcon Club was alleged to have been maliciously fired by a former member. Company Officer James Hyden of the N.F.S. spoke of receiving a fire call at 9.21pm. The structure of the staircase was of dry matchwood and it would have burst into flame in about another ten minutes. A former committee member said "I did it out of spite" .. some of the members had not been kind because "I was not dressed as well as them"

Mrs Thurlborn of 29 Victoria Road rented a bedroom and sitting-room at £1.15.0 a week in December. It included gas and electricity, and she and her husband had the use of the coal shed. Recently a cold water basin had been put in. Her landlord told the Tribunal he paid £1.10.0 a week rent for the house. He wanted the rooms for his family as he, his wife and two children, the elder aged nearly 5 all slept in the same room. The rent was reduced to £1.5.0

Twelve months' disqualification from driving was amongst the penalties imposed on a "freelance motor dealer" against whom there were four summonses. The first was for driving a motor truck at a dangerous speed in Victoria Avenue (50 mph), the second for exceeding the permitted speed for that class of vehicle, the third for driving without third party insurance in force and the fourth for driving without a current driving licence. When spoken to defendant told police "I am afraid I was over the limit" but claimed he had the vehicle in full control, his brakes were perfect and he could have stopped if necessary. He was fined a total of £10.10.0

There is to be no night-shift in Cambridge. Instead there will be an attempt by local industry to save, during normal hours, 30 per cent of its electricity consumption. To do this the larger firms, among them Pye's and Marshalls Flying School, will make use of stand-by generator sets which will relieve the grid at peak periods. The breweries have worked out plans to transfer part of their share of the load by running a proportion of their machinery outside the peak hours. A spokesman said this might be described as "a semi-nightshift". A large proportion of the peak load is accounted for by domestic users who will have to make a drastic reduction in the use of electrical appliances if industry is to avoid cuts in power, p5 # c.27.4

Bus passengers stranded this morning when their vehicle ran into a 5 ft drift on the Harston-Fowlmere road, walked waist-high through the snow to another bus. A "Clippie" accompanied them. The 7.40 Premier Travel coach from Royston to Cambridge was stuck in the drift for 3 1/2 [three and a half hours. A snow-plough called in to its assistance was itself stuck about 300 yards away. Several roads in the district were completely blocked this morning after last night's blizzard. Worst local road, classified by the A.A. as "very dangerous" is the Cambridge-Huntingdon thoroughfare where the snow has been wind driven into three and four foot drifts, p5

Villages cut off by snow included Elsworth and Knapwell. "Neither the mail nor the papers have arrived to-day" an Elsworth resident told the "C.D.N." today. A night with one degree of frost, followed by the warmest day of the year, and then a night with no frost at all. This was Cambridge's weekend experience. This morning at half-past ten it was 35 and still rising. Work on snow clearance proceeded throughout the week-end in both borough and county with the result that all main roads are now open both ways and all by-roads passable. "We are hoping for the best" said Mr W.E. Doran, engineer to the Ouse Catchment Board this morning. He was asked about the prospect of flooding and explained that at present there is only a slight increase in river discharges. But a quick thaw will no doubt cause floods in the upper reaches. There is no immediate danger of a crisis in the fens because there is a very large storage area available. "If the thaw continues slowly there is a very good chance of it passing off without undue trouble", p1

"We all have our share of food and those who want more are greedy - and when they take illegal means to get extra it is something far more serious. A charwoman of Coldham's Lane heard these words from the chairman of Cambridge Borough Magistrates (Mr W.L. Briggs) at the Magistrates court when she was fined £2 and £3 respectively for stealing a ration book and using it when it was not issued to her. The defendant was 59 years old. On leaving school she took up domestic work. In the 1914-18 war she worked as a charwoman and was still employed as such. Her husband died two years ago and there were six in the family - all married with the exception of a daughter aged 18. The Kent Medway and the Wiltshire Avon - reaching their highest level for 20 years - and the Thames were to-day providing the greatest flooding dangers. At Maidstone riverside basements, cellars and yards of warehouses were flooded, and water seeped into houses and shops. Some streets in Sailsbury were flooded to a depth of several inches and piles of clay were dumped in the main street ready to block up shops and houses. The Thames rose 18 inches at Maidenhead during the night and at Windsor it was 2ft 6 ins above normal. Flood waters invaded many more acres. The A.A. reported numerous flooded roads in Somerset, Wales, East Anglia and the Home Counties. The latest Air Ministry forecast is that there will be local slight snowfalls in many areas, becoming more general and heavier. Snow clearance in Cambridge up to Feb 18th cost approximately £2,000. Another unusual expenditure is that of 35s a day incurred during the recent lighting restrictions in removing electric lamp bulbs from the various traffic signs which cannot be switched off, p4

From all parts of the district today come stories of flooded roads, following on the thaw and rain, with some of them impassable to traffic. In Cambridge itself, Parkers Piece, which for weeks has been an expanse of dazzling white, with not so much as a blade of grass showing, now resembles a lake. At St Ives some of the back streets are flooded fairly extensively, the water on the road to a depth of about 10 inches entering many houses in the town, forcing people to move their belongings upstairs. Traffic had to be diverted last night because of the movement washing water into the houses. Three feet of water in places is reported at both Pampisford and Caxton, with vehicles stuck in the mud at the latter village and having to be dug out., p5

Cambridge has been hit today by some of the worst flooding for 30 years. The rapidly rising and flowing river has invaded riverside homes, Midsummer Common and other open spaces are flooded, there have been fears for the safety of Silver Street Bridge, and there is no sign of any diminution of the abnormal flow. There is an unconfirmed report that the Byron's Pool sluice has broken, and Grantchester Meadows and the "Backs" are completely under water. Silver Street was closed to all traffic during the morning. There were fears that the rush of water would seriously affect the foundations of the bridge. Street lighting was switched on in Linton when residents of houses in Meadow Lane and Chapel Terrace made a hurried evacuation of their waterlogged homes. The water rose to well over knee-deep but was subsiding this morning. At Sawston the sub-power station was marooned and electricity was cut off this morning. Sir, I am interested in the letter of H.O. Fleming on the collection of refuse. The only way to have the old dustbin removed is to see the dustmen personally and make a suitable arrangement with them. I have had to do this myself and have found them very civil and helpful. The dustmen are highly selective and seem to go through the bins carefully, taking out anything they do not fancy and strewing it about. They also batter the bin out of shape very quickly and in many case leave it some distance away from where it is placed outside my premises. Now that we have provided cars for officials they might perhaps get around a little and see what is being done - (letter from J.R.Partington, Maids Causeway, Cambridge), p7

Twelve months ago, when landing craft were offered for sale to the public, the 12th Cambridge Scout Group bought one, and under the direction of their Scoutmaster, Mr W.A. Mackrow, they set to work with a will to convert it for troop use. On Saturday the result of their hard work and skill - a trim looking and extremely comfortable seaworthy craft was named the "Adventurer". Founder of the troop in 1911, its first Scoutmaster - and a staunch supporter ever since - Mr J. Murrish performed the ceremony, which took place at Peterhouse boat yard. Flood clearance pumping is now being done by individual farmers in many places in the fen district. Some 25 small pumps have been issued from the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries pump depot at Warboys. The depot maintains a "flying squad" which goes out day or night should any of the pumps cease because of need for service. Since the depot came into being at the former R.A.F. Pathfinder airfield is had dealt with between 120 and 130 units. The depot started from scratch with just three bare buildings of the deserted airfield. It is now a complete unit with canteen, and administrative office, petrol supplies and even facilities for doing a certain amount of servicing of motor vehicles if necessary. No sooner had it opened than a stream of lorries bringing pumps, equipment and what one man described as "an odd assortment of pipes" began to arrive from all over England. P4

The opinion that the people of St Ives had suffered for a fortnight unnecessarily from water in their town and houses that had nothing to do with the river was expressed a meeting of St Ives Borough Council. Mr T.H. Burgess said "I consider the river had some part to do with the water in the town but not quite so big a part as we would like to think". The original flush of water had been from land drainage due to the lack of ditches and the fact that existing ones were full of snow. The river at that time was very low. He said the reason why they were left with drainage water was because they were dealing with an antiquated sewerage system. The sewer itself had been covered with walls, fences and trees, p9

An event of unusual interest took place on Sunday night when the congregation of St Andrew-the-Great held their ordinary evening service in the chapel of Christ's College. The organ of St Andrew's church has been out of action since melted snow came through the roof some weeks ago. As the estimated cost of repairs lies between £100- £200 and will take some months to effect, the congregation was grateful for this opportunity for a service accompanied by an organ and the College chapel was crammed from end to end, p5

Numerous Cambridge bankmen lost all interest in interest last night. The occasion was the post-war revival of Barclays Bank ball, always one of the outstanding features of pre-war Cambridge. The Large room of the Guildhall had undergone one of its most attractive transformations. A special floor gave added pleasure to the dancing, though the beautiful tempo of Bunny May's broadcasting band would have made it possible to dance on almost any surface. It was the kind of music that slashes the bar profits, because it positively enticed you to dance, p4

A conference to discuss water problems and their solutions heard recommendations as to the water supply to the parishes of Longstowe, Babraham, Duxford etc. Merits of a scheme for a supply of water to those parishes without a piped supply were discussed. The main point at issue was whether the existing source at Croydon should be maintained and developed. One hundred and twenty thousand gallons of water per day were wasted during the recent severe weather. Owing to the snow and floods it was difficult to account for the losses. Eventually however they were found to be due to burst pipes at Bassingbourn airfield, p9

Simplicity and speed is the key-note in the Cambridge Borough Council's Birdwood Road building site, when 158 permanent concrete houses are being erected. Machinery used in the work of construction - like cranes, cement- mixers and lifts for conveying concrete to the scaffolding tops - is electrically powered from the Electricity Company's supply. Briefly the method of construction is this : a concrete foundation is laid and on it a steel case is placed in position. Concrete is poured into this steel “skeleton” and after the mixture has set the case is removed - leaving concrete walls with an air-space between. The roofs will be tiled. Ninety per cent of the labour, incidentally, is Polish 47 04 21

The Cambridge sporting fraternity has lost one of its most colourful characters by the death of Mr Charlie Driver. His aquatic achievements are legion and more than 90 people owe their lives to his life-saving prowess in the water. Among many tangible reminders of this contributions to the art of life-saving is a silver cigarette case presented to him as long ago as 1908 on behalf of readers of the Cambridge Daily News in recognition of his skill and promptitude in saving 31 lives from drowning at the Town Bathing Place. He retired after 34 years of service as custodian of the ton bathing sheds on Sheep's Green, only to come back again and carry on during the war years. Putting the clock back some 60 years one recalls how, at the old swimming sports at the Old Ladder on Sheep's Green, he made us envy his skill in bringing to the surface the largest number of plates cast in the river, to win the prize for that event, p5 # c.38 : swimming

Among the Big Tops, Bertram Mills' tenting-circus is surely the top. It is a circus-de-luxe. To begin with every one of the 3,500 seats has a back to it and you can see in comfort. And as the animals are the backbone of the circus let us take a look at the Bertram Mills collection. First the horses - horses clever, horses dignified, horses graceful and all beautiful. Less graceful, but with their own beauty of their quiet grey colour were the six performing elephants, everyone a lady - but not lady-like enough to stifle the yawn with which they sat up after lying down to "sleep" to the strains of dreamy music. Strength was combined with grace in the Tovarisch Troupe and finally of course, there were the clowns, a merry nonsensical crew. Visitors to Bertram Mills Circus this week watching the daring acts carried out in a brilliant array of colourful costumes might be surprised to hear that as many as a thousand costumes and uniforms are used in the show. I had a talk with the wardrobe mistress, Miss Wilmer, and learnt that she designs them herself, cuts, fits and makes them. Like everybody else Bertram Mills Circus have their coupon problems - especially when costumes need replacing every year. They have two allocations by the Board of Trade but have to account for every coupon they spend and give an account of the number of yards used in each garment, p5

Next Thursday will see the opening of recruiting for the new Territorial Army. For a great many years our local voluntary commitments were more or less confined to the Cambridgeshire Regiment. The future however, holds out something much greater in scope and more varied. The total numbers to be recruited will be three times as many as in pre-war days. It is idle to suppose we do not regret the passing of our own Infantry regiment but the name and the traditions of the "Cambridgeshires" will live on in the 629 L.A.A. Regiment R.A. For over five hours the pros and cons of a proposal to erect a greyhound and sports stadium at Cherry Hinton were argued at a local inquiry into an appeal against the Borough Council's refusal of an application by Messrs Bartlett, Dash and Evans. The intention was to establish a handsome stadium, which would become a sports centre for the Eastern Counties. A promoter said Cambridge was the centre of by far the largest area in England without a greyhound track. The borough surveyor said the whole idea of the town planning scheme was to make Cherry Hinton a self-contained village community. Sir, - A disturbing rumour has recently come to my notice that one of our famous beauty spots in Cambridgeshire may be in imminent danger of being despoiled. I refer to Barrington Hill. There appears to be a project afloat for the building along the side of Barrington Hill of a number of workmen's dwellings for the housing of operative employed in the Cement Works. We know only too well that the need for such dwellings exists. We point out however that there are other and more suitable thoroughfares what would serve a far more useful purpose for such building schemes than this beautiful and historic spot - the desecration of which will be a matter of the greatest distress to many thousands in Cambridgeshire. - letter from Miss M.S. There were also a large number of churches where considerable repair was needed now to prevent serious decay later. The fen floods and emergency payment to be made for damage done by them were the subject of discussion in parliament. The Ministry of Agriculture said it was a magnificent task on the part of farmers and workers to plant 1,950,000 acres of wheat. He mentioned that nearly 700,000 acres of agriculture were flooded. The floods were not due either to delay or negligence in carrying out drainage schemes, or to war-time drainage works carried out in the uplands. "We have no assurances that next winter nature may not break even the disastrous record of this year", he added. "Therefore much urgent work must be done if next year our river systems are going to be able to carry the volume of water that may descend on them" # c.29

To-day, their work of pumping the floods off the Fens completed, National Fire service men who have been taking part in "Operation Fenland" left the area for their home station. The men were volunteers who came from all over England. One said: "It's good to be able to see some concrete results of the work in cleared land after so many weeks of seeing nothing but a vast expanse of water going down inch by inch". In many places you see a land of smooth, dried grey mud, cracked into many-lined patterns by the heat of the sun. There is an air of desolation in the now-dry flood-wrecked farms. Yet the hardy Fen people are already moving back. # c.29

Miss Cambridge 1947 was last night chosen from about a dozen young girls who entered for the competition at the Summertime Ball in the Guildhall. Arranged by Billy Kaye, the ball which was in the modern manner, had non- stop dancing to three bands, one of them the Orquestra Cubanos, providing a complete rhumba session. The competitors were called on the platform and the best three chosen by two judges. They were then placed in order of merit by the volume of applause received from the audience. The winners were 1 Miss Margaret Bale, 2 Miss Gwen Aves, 3 Miss Jean Kirby

The temptation caused by a salvage dump containing equipment which was expected by two men to be "broken up and thrown away" led to their appearance at the Cambs Petty Sessions on Saturday. Defendants pleaded guilty to being concerned in stealing four petrol motors and generators to the value of £40 from the salvage dump at Waterbeach Aerodrome. One said "About a fortnight ago I was working on the dump with a civilian driver called "Spike". He asked me if I could get some engines. He said he could sell the engines and make some money and would stand me a drink sometime". Defendant said he understood from "Paddy" that the engines were to be broken up and he thought they would be thrown away

"I think the people who have fought in favour of Newmarket remaining in Suffolk have fought brilliantly - by discouraging discussion and crying 'We want Suffolk, we want Suffolk' they have beaten all the thinking people in the town and I take my hat off to them". So declared Mr W.J. Taylor, one-time chairman of Cambridgeshire County Council and prime mover behind the Council's proposal to include Newmarket in a new Cambridgeshire. He condemned - in no uncertain terms - the general apathy he claimed existed among the people of Newmarket with regard to the boundary question.

Plans for providing Airey houses at a number of villages in the Chesterton R.D.C. area in lieu of permanent brick houses are being prepared. The Ministry of Health have ruled that during the next 18 months, rural authorities must erect one Airey house per three houses constructed. The architect is preparing revised lay-out plans for the sites at Fulbourn, Teversham, Longstanton and Elsworth. A lay-out plan for Coton, providing for a total of 54 houses was approved. It is the opinion of the Headmaster of Chesterton Modern School that every boy there is two years retarded in certain subjects. When presenting his report at yesterday's Speech Day and prize-giving he said "My estimate is that every boy in this school is two years retarded in many subjects - such as mental work, where there was no teacher during the war, science, where there was no teacher for a long period, and art, where there was a great variation of teacher and method". He knew a number of parents realised that, because many of them were only too anxious to have their boys return to school after the school-leaving age had been reached. Last year 29 returned voluntarily, and 22 of these were coming back again in September Pembroke College, Cambridge has celebrated its Sexcentenary. The celebrations took the form of a luncheon and garden party during which valuable manuscripts and college plate were on show. The display of college plate included two irreplaceable cups. One has a curse associated with it. This is the Anathema cup. It bears the inscription "Who shall alienate it, let him be anathema". Well known and a popular figure in Cambridge musical circles for many years, Mr Percy Cowell, Musical Director at the Dorothy Cafe, died at his home. He was 61. Born in Cambridge he was first employed in the office at Messrs Eaden Lilley's, playing the piano in his spare time. In the early twenties he took up his musical career seriously. At one time he ran a band at the Rendezvous and several years ago he had a band at the Trocadero restaurant, Piccadilly, London. When the New Dorothy Cafe was opened in 1930 his band was installed as a resident one and he was fully employed until the early months of the war, when he was joined by Mr Reg Cottage and his band # c.69

Mr W.E. Doran, Chief engineer to the River Great Ouse Catchment Board, has announced plans costing £5,000,000 to prevent flooding of the Fens. The plans, which are described as being able quite definitely to give safety to the fens, are a modification of the scheme proposed in 1942 but shelved owing to the war. The 1942 proposal provided for the cutting of a new river from Denver to St Germans, with a balancing reservoir at Denver to accommodate the flow when the tidal door was shut. A new channel 30 miles long is planned from Denver to Barton Mills to cut off flood water from the high ground before it reaches the embanked sections of the fenland rivers. This channel up to the Lark is part of a previous scheme which provided for a cut-off channel going right up to Grantchester. # c.29

"Sir - Living in Newmarket Road, Cambridge, in close vicinity to Christ Church I would like to ask whether this road is intended to make up for the now closed Brooklands motor race course? The speed limit seems to be double that of other roads of the town, judging by the racing prevailing among country buses, motor lorries of the heaviest type, even 60 feet long ones, and motor cycles, the throttles of which to open in this region of private houses seems to be point of honour. Men and women from all parts of Cambridgeshire attended the British Legion County Rally on Parker's Piece, Cambridge, on Sunday afternoon. In the course of an address the Rev J.N. Duckworth mentioned the presence of German prisoners of war amongst the crowd of onlookers and, welcoming them, said: "There is no enmity here". "We are", he went on, "living in very, very dangerous days. We are threatened with losing all those things for which we have fought and struggled, and for which we have endured. The friendship and comradeship of those several long years of war seem to be melting away. In their place there was fear and the seeds of distrust were being sown as never before. Flying Officer Ford stepped out, uninjured except for a chip in the skin on the bridge of his nose. Within an hour he was on his way in an Anson that had been sent to fetch him. May I explain why St Matthew's Piece has not yet been restored to its former state. It was requisitioned by the War Department for a vehicle car-park. The surface and foundations were not suitable for such purposes and the military authorities were told that their vehicles would cause extensive damage to the playing area and would involve them in a heavy claim for compensation. When the War Department released the site the Corporation lodged a substantial claim for reinstatement. The claim has now been referred to higher authority for arbitration. Sir - This week Histon villagers should normally be celebrating the traditional age-old annual Feast, but alas! When the children and their accompanying parents assembled to partake in the amusements that one is accustomed to find pitched on the village green, they found this pleasant open space as bare as Mother Hubbard's cupboard. Excepting for one or two years during the war the oldest inhabitant states that she never remembers the showmen missing Histon feast and the family of Thurston have always been associated with the festival. The Histon council includes many people who have migrated to the village and personally have no room for such traditional customs as village feasts. - letter

Homes specially intended for old people should be in towns rather than in the country said Lord Amulree in addressing the Woman Public Health Officers' Association Summer school in Cambridge. It was a great advantage to have the home in a town, he said. For a large majority of people a home in the country did not work at all. "Most of our population are townspeople and also, when they are growing old, their interests become rather contracted. Old people do enjoy calling on their friends' houses. They like to go to the local pub or to the pictures, and if they cannot do that they like to sit in the window and watch other people going to the pub and to the cinema"

Sir - I think it is scandalous that 31 trees should be removed from Newmarket Road, Cambridge. This is easily the least imposing approach to the town and the removal of the trees will make it ten times worse. Why is this road always chosen when a site has to be found for a new refuse dump. Why has it such a bad road surface for such an important main thoroughfare. Cambridge has not yet produced any reports of flying saucers, but yesterday there occurred the perfectly genuine episode of The Flying Hay. The phenomenon was seen by Mr Philip Porteous, engineer and manager of the Cambridge Waterworks Co as he was standing in his garden at Fulbourn early yesterday afternoon. "I was looking at a field with hay lying in it, when suddenly large quantities of the stuff rose straight up into the air for some five hundred to a thousand feet and then floated off in a westerly direction", he told a C.D.N. reporter. "From inquiries made of my friends I find that to-day more money is spent at the greengrocers and fishmongers than at the grocers", Mr John Stamps, Deputy Secretary, Family Welfare Association told a Summer School. Talking of housing he pointed out that it was uniformly accepted that the rent to be paid by a family should not exceed one sixth of the total income. "Before the war", he continued, "people chose to live in a house, the rental of which they could afford. I wonder how many are doing that today. What I am concerned about is the cost of houses for purchase and the fact that in order to secure accommodation young people are undertaking mortgage repayments considerably in excess of one-sixth of their income. I wonder if they realise that this is to be a fixed charge over a long period, and that whether one, two or three babies come along they will still have this charge on their income"

Seven members of the Cambridge National Fire Service were at Addenbrooke's Hospital this morning suffering from slight burns from mustard gas sustained in dealing with a fire involving a truck-load of 60 112lb American gas bombs on the railway line between Six Mile Bottom and Fulbourn late last night. The main line between Cambridge and Ipswich was closed to traffic as a result of contamination over 100 yards. Later the damaged wagon was tipped off the rails to the side of the line. The truck was one of a train of 30 to 40 carrying mustard gas bombs from Warren Wood, near Thetford, to Barry in Wales, for dumping in the sea. As it passed through Six Mile Bottom the stationmaster saw that the truck was ablaze. The burning wagon, the third from the engine, was uncoupled, and the engine restarted to pull it away from these. An eye witness said to a "Cambridge Daily News" reporter: "It was a spectacular sight. About fifty per cent of the bombs exploded with a "whoosh" and a burst of flame which shot fifty feet into the air. Poisonous fumes spread over a range of fifty or sixty yards. The police afterwards sealed off an area around the blaze to await decontamination" # c.26.2

A protest about the waste of paper involved in the presentation of committee minutes was voiced at Saturday's meeting of Cambridgeshire County Council. Coun R.M. Ald Stubbs thought, in view of the shortage of paper, which, among other things, had a limiting effect on keeping the public fully acquainted with what was going on, the minutes showed a sheer waste of paper. At the meeting of the Chesterton Rural District Council it was reported that a further three parishes (Coton, Fen Drayton and Lolworth) had been supplied with water mains. It was anticipated that the work involving the supply to Barton, Comberton, Toft, Haslingfield and Harlton would be put in hand during the coming year. Several parishes, notably Croxton, Eltisley, Graveley, Hardwick and Dry Drayton were extremely short of water for domestic and stock purposes and trouble was anticipated in the summer months. The position could not be improved until a new high level water tower was erected thereby affording sufficient pressure to enable a mains supply to be taken to these villages.

People passing over Victoria Avenue Bridge, Cambridge, must often have seen long, securely fastened and labelled packing cases leaving the boatyard there. The cases are addressed to rowing clubs in distant parts of the world, and inside each is a slender, beautifully finished racing craft. Each boat bears a small name-plate stating simply "H.C. Scarcity of material and labour is the only thing that prevents the ready acceptance of every order. Prices are nowadays a cause for regret. Eights that once sold for about £60 now cost £190. It will be learned with regret in Newmarket that Major W.V. Beatty will be retiring from training at the end of the present year, and in view of this has decided to sell Phantom House with its training establishment and stud farm. This is one of the most important properties to be offered for public sale in Newmarket for many years. It will be offered for sale as a whole, providing an opportunity of acquiring intact a first-class bloodstock undertaking. It comprises Phantom House and Phantom House Training Establishment, Phantom House stud farm with 3 sets of premises and 15 well-maintained paddocks, covering in all about 53 acres

The fact that Norman Hartnell as achieved the distinction of designing Princess Elizabeth's wedding-gown is of particular interest to Cambridge, where many people recall he was a prominent figure in the Footlights Dramatic Club in the years immediately after the First World War. He designed dresses for at least two productions and appeared in shows wearing some of them. In fact it is claimed that he was "discovered" here and took up dress designing as a career as a direct result

Sir - May I join the protest against the excessive charges now being asked for the hire of a punt on the river. It is within easy memory that it was possible to hire a punt out for and afternoon and evening for five or six persons and still have 10s change from a pound note. I can see nothing which warrants the present-day prices. Is it that the ordinary townsfolk are being slowly squeezed from the river in order to allow the varsity men and the more wealthy visitors to the town to enjoy "our" river? The Borough Council should either consider setting up a municipal boatyard for the hire of punts or investigate the charges with a view to softening the blow to the everyday working-class family of Cambridge - letter from "Constant User"

An unusually early harvest in ideal weather, particularly for combines - but one with disappointingly low yields. That, in brief, sums up the situation in Cambridgeshire where a certain amount of new corn is now on the market. Yields of wheat generally are very poor, averaging only about four sacks an acre, compared with twelve last year. The position in East Anglia generally is worse than in the rest of the country owing to the drought. Land which was lightly-flooded around Stretham, Waterbeach and Over has yielded crops, some better than the average because of the moisture which the dry land lacked

Further steps are to be taken by Huntingdon, St Ives, Godmanchester and St Neots, the four towns so badly affected by the March floods, to press home to the Government the urgency of some action being taken to mitigate further floods of these places. Mr W.E. Doran (Ouse Catchment Board Engineer) said that in his view the inhabitants of those towns were suffering from the sins of their ancestors in building houses in a flood area. At the height of the recent flood water was passing St Ives at the rate of 11,000 cubic feet per second. It was impossible to dig a channel capable of taking such an enormous volume of water. A new sluice at the paper mills, St Neots would improve the position for that town but would not stop flooding there # c.29

Sir - a recent letter in defence of present punt charges prompts me to indulge in some mathematical calculation. At a large boathouse on the upper river I counted seventy punts recently. On any fine summer afternoon there is usually a queue waiting to hire them. Assume that each punt is hired for three hours only at 3s.per hour, and it must be clear that the weekly turn-over must be approximately £200. Deduct from this the wages of four men (say £25), allow £25 for running costs and there is a clear profit of £150 per week - J.A. Parkinson, Newnham Rd, Cambridge

Fines totalling £35 were imposed on a Cambridge baker who admitted having sold 71 loaves of bread without coupons to Ukranians from the European Volunteers Workers' Hostel at West Wratting. It was stated that the bread was being sold at the camp by the men for 6s. for a 2lb loaf. The baker said that a procession of displaced persons told him a terrible tale about the shortage of food at their camp. Some told him they only got three slices of bread a day and pleaded with him to let them have some. He let them have some stale loaves as with the particular flour used now it was difficult to sell stale bread. He made no profit out of it and had no idea they were being sold for such exorbitant prices at the camp

A petition by the Rector of St Peter's church, Duxford, for the demolition of the disused St John's church, Duxford, on the ground that it was in a very advanced sate of decay and there was a possibility of serious accidents happening, was heard at a Consistory Court at Ely Cathedral. The Rector said that St John's church had been broken into, defiled and misused in a great many and scandalous ways and in a state of considerable dilapidation. The walls were opening up and breaking away from the roof, and tiles were coming off. The rain had already destroyed a great deal of the medieval contents and irreparable damage had been done to "really good stuff". Efforts had been made to persuade the R.A.F. to take over the church as a chapel in memory of the American pilots who fell in the Battle of Britain, but that scheme ended in failure.

The meal, the normal one served at the camp, consisted of soup, cold beef, salad and potatoes, baked apple and custard and, finally, coffee. In the words of Councillor Frank Priest "the new floor of the Cambridge Guildhall is well and truly laid". This brief ceremony was performed last night at the first Ball of the season, and what a delight it was to dance on such a new and beautifully polished floor. One couple, probably so unaccustomed to such smoothness in Cambridge, were rather too enthusiastic and found themselves, quite unintentionally, making a seat on the floor! It is thought that some of the shoes and hob-nail boots worn by dancers during the war years was the reason for the bad state of the previous floor.

The operations began last week when to men from London started boring a 20ft hole on the Whitwell bridle path, which is War Department property and used by the Territorial Association as a rifle range. While housing is still one of the most urgent problems facing the country, it is encouraging to see where progress is really being made, and such an excellent example of British workmanship as the house at Waterbeach which has been erected under the Chesterton Rural District Council's post-war programme. This house, no.28 Bannold Road, was inspected by members of the council on Thursday. Built of red brick it makes use of every available inch of space. The front door opens into a red-tiled hall, at the end of which is situated a red tiled kitchen. Mr F. Cooper (chief carpenter) said these tiles had been used because of expenditure but all other rooms had the usual wooden floors. Few housewives would find fault with this though, for besides looking very attractive, it is easier for cleaning. A device by which chimneys can be cleaned without making any soot or dirt in the room is being tried out in Cambridge by Super-clean from Hartington Grove. I understand the customary method of chimney sweeping is followed. The difference is that a device is fitted right over the stove, thus preventing soot from flying into the room. The main difficulty is that of adapting it to fit the many different sizes and types of grate. It costs more, and takes longer to have chimneys swept this way. An ordinary chimney costs 6s and it takes three-quarters of an hour to do the job - maybe longer. They would then find out the discomforts which are a dustman's lot. He mustn't mind when lifting a bin if water and filth trickle down his neck through a hole; he mustn't mind if somebody puts some acid in a bin which when emptied sprays on one's clothes and burns holes in them (these are not replaced). One pair of overalls a year is the limit. Each motor is given a district and that has to be cleared, and if the dust and smell should make him feel ill he must just carry on. With all this we are expected to sort all the paper from the dirt. If all householders kept it separate it would be different. Critics should try on a windy day, emptying a bin that has been crammed full. That is a sweeping thing to say and will not find favour in all quarters". Referring to criticism that the one-way traffic scheme soon to be introduced in the centre of town was "the wrong way round" he explained that it diverted from the town centre the large amount of traffic going to the station from the Chesterton direction and would encourage lorry drivers passing through Cambridge to take the route through the Backs. The slow rate of building means that people have got to keep on living in emergency accommodation and other families which ought to be moved into emergency accommodation are, therefore, kept waiting. Isn't it time something was done about the congestion existing in the Cafeterias and Quick Service Restaurants at all the rush hour times, caused by the invasion of undergraduates. Surely the facilities at the various colleges provide them with a mid-day meal, and if this should not prove sufficient, why must they patronise all the catering establishments at the critical time when we, the working population, adjourn for lunch? Owing to the acute food shortage, after spending the first 20 minutes of our brief lunch hour queueing, we arrive at the service counter to find all the most nourishing dishes gone and have to satisfy ourselves with the inevitable sausages and other equally indifferent fare. Cambridge Guildhall was transformed into a hairdressing salon for the first hair styling competition ever held in Cambridge. There were 22 entrants in the contest, two only were men. Many of the competitors favoured swathed backs with waves moving across the head and curls haloing it. Practically every shade of hair was represented, from platinum to silver, but reddish shades predominated. The winning competitor (Muriel Ham) designed an original creation, the finished effect of which looked rather like a Geisha girl. The hair was built high on the crown in an asymmetric yet balanced line and the nape hair taken in with swathed cuts

Fen Drayton's 97-years-old oldest inhabitant and two Darby-and Joan old-age pensioners were among the 98 victims of last Spring's flooding in the village who found themselves the possessors of several months' extra rations of butter and lard, as well as tins of sausage meat and dried milk. The food was the gift of the Mombasa Thank Offering to Britain Fund, whose local daily paper "The Mombasa Times" is edited by a former member of the "Cambridge Daily News" staff, Mr Ronald Roper. Similar distributions have been made at Willingham, Swavesey, Over and other places in the affected area

An assurance that there would be an improvement next year in the distribution of ration books was given at a meeting of the Cambridgeshire Federation of Women's Institutes. One member said their village was one of several small ones within varying distances of Bourn and at least six sent to Bourn to collect their ration books. "Imagine what happens", she said, "when the inhabitants of all these

The gifts were many and varied, consisting of Christmas puddings, preserves, canned fruit, dripping, meat products, dried milk, soups, dried fruit, vegetables, cheese and soap. The Agent-General of Victoria said when they discovered we were short of food housewives throughout Australia had queued up to give it to be sent to the people over here

The Principal of the Cambridge Training College for Teachers maintained that what was needed above all else was some kind of stability for the young people, who had not had the pre-war background of the older generation, and were trying to find themselves in a difficult world. "Bed time has been an immense problem; many mothers have allowed girls of 12 upwards to stay up and keep them company. The result was there were now so many young people - possibly at the Universities - who had simply not had enough sleep for the length of their life". Youth clubs were affecting the older girls who went in for dancing that kept them out late. The wireless, too, was a disturbing influence during homework

Managers, employees and customers all met on the same side of the counter when Lloyds Bank Ltd, Cambridge, held their first social function since the end of the war. It took place at the Dorothy Cafe and consisted of a dinner and ball which included a variety of dances, both old and new, to suit all ages. Two rooms, the lower dining room and the Oak Room were used for the dinner and the guests then returned to the ballroom where the resident band had already started on the lengthy programme of dances. These included such things as the palais glide, conga and hokey-cokey in which everyone joined.

The introduction of the Town and Country Planning Bill, 1947 was described as "a great step forward" at the annual meeting of the Cambridge Preservation Society. Elliot FitzGibbon of the Ministry of Town and Country Planning said that local people are never to be trusted to preserve their own natural and architectural treasures. They are too often quite unconscious of their value and any thief may take them away, or any vandal destroy them while their owners sleep, drugged with the politics of the parish pump.

Ald A.E. Stubbs, M.P., made observations on agricultural wages; he said "We have been carrying on with prisoners of war, displaced persons and any scratch labour we can get. It is of enormous importance we should have full production. We must have the manpower to carry it through. I think it safe to say that in the next year the German prisoners of war will have gone. Poles will be going, and it will leave the agricultural industry 250,000 men short on the land. The fact that the industry was highly mechanised would make up for some of the loss of manpower, but would not close the gap".

The first R.A.F. "permanent" cinema in the country to be fitted with 16 m.m. sub-standard size projectors was opened at Duxford. Those who remember the somewhat bare camp cinema of the war days would not recognise the one at Duxford. RAF personnel have fitted it with a sloping floor using chiefly wood from old aircraft packing cases. The walls have been decorated with brightly-coloured murals based on Disney cartoon subjects and the whole atmosphere is that of a cosy "intimate" cinema. The projector picture is clear, and the sound reproduction excellent. The equipment has been provided by the RAF Film Corporation, which also supplies the films

In spite of the fact that there are even fewer fireworks about this year than last, we shall doubtless hear quite a few bangs to-night, organised by those boys whose hours of patient waiting have been rewarded by securing a few of the precious squibs, spinning wheels, golden rain and other varieties which delight both the eye and the ear. The shortage is due to a combination of three things - shortage of paper, labour and fuel, paper being possibly the primary one. The Board of Trade have issued an appeal to the public not to use waste paper and cardboard for November the Fifth bonfires as it goes to make packaging for exports and ceiling boards for new houses

The question of providing access to Cambridge railway station from the east side of the town was mentioned at the Town Council. Coun Amey said that at one time the people of Romsey had a bus service to the station but that had been taken away. Many railway workers lived in the Romsey area and the lack of any access to the station from that side caused them unnecessary miles of cycling and walking. Mrs Mace explaining the position at Chesterton said approximately a third of the present staff was part time, which meant the night, weekend and early morning duties fell to the permanent staff. Many people unable to be in their homes listened to the broadcast of the Royal Wedding in Cambridge cinemas, all of which were thrown open for the purpose, free of charge. The biggest audience is reported from the Central Cinema who estimated the total as being in the neighbourhood of 500. The sound equipment at the Regal broke down at the last minute and the small queue which had formed there was diverted to the New Theatre opposite, where a set had been hastily brought from his home and installed in the foyer by the Manager and the thrilling, impressive and historic service of the wedding of H.R.H. At the concert of St Andrew's church school, Chesterton the Vicar said that the school needed modernising. "We want new class rooms, an assembly hall, better accommodation for the staff and cloak rooms etc. Under the new development plan which has been passed the school would be entirely pulled down and rebuilt on the same site for £60 or £70,000. The manager do not agree", he declared, "they think it is a financial extravagance and believe everything that is necessary could be done for a third of that cost". The speaker concluded that modernisation could be carried out in 50 or 100 years' time, the school would still be there growing and developing and would show "a little of the history of England"

The question of providing week end leave transport for personnel at the RAF Station, Oakington, evoked a good deal of discussion at the sitting of the Eastern Area Traffic Commissioners. Mr Lainson (for Premier Travel) mentioned that his company sought to provide a new express service from Oakington RAF to King's Cross, London. The proposed fare was 12s.6d return. He also said they were willing to provide a "feeder" service between Oakington and Cambridge Railway Station as his company could not hope to carry 600 odd personnel direct to London. Cambridge Rotary Club will be helping to make history next Wednesday when, as guests at "lunch" of Cambridge, Ohio, they will put in a Trans-Atlantic telephone call to the other club 3,000 miles away, so there may be an opportunity of expressing thanks on the spot. The Ohio Club meets at 12 noon at Hotel Berwick and to coincide with this, our Cambridge club will sit down to lunch at five o'clock. Most of the food has already arrived and with it printed menus which include such delicacies are baked sugar cured ham with June peas and spiced beets, and sliced Hawaiian pineapple. The two clubs have long had close relations and this happy idea of our American namesakes will strengthen the bonds.

Plans for the development of present-day Newmarket, with its population of 10,000 people - the majority of whom are dependent upon the racing industry - into a town of 25,000 people with light industries to supplement the bloodstock and training business should remain entirely in the hands of Newmarket people and not outsiders, claim the Newmarket Urban Council. In 1946 the Newmarket U.D.C. issued an interim report on the future planning of Newmarket that was widely acclaimed. Now a special sub-committee of the West Suffolk County Council have suggested that planning should pass into the hands of an area committee consisting of 17 members – only three of whom would be Newmarket councillors. The two councils are already at loggerheads on the future of the town's fire and ambulance services

Mr P. Porteous of the Cambridge University and Town Waterworks Company gave details of the sources from which his company obtained their supplies and said each one was approaching the limit of capacity of their present sources and were having to look further afield. Cambridgeshire County Council were required to bear a substantial proportion of the cost of these new works. He was concerned in regard to a scheme to deepen certain dykes in the neighbourhood of Isleham where there would be a great risk of depleting the underground water in the source there. If the dyke sin the fen were cut down low and into the edge of the chalk they would bleed out all the water in the upper reservoir and, as a result, there would be a very difficult position at Isleham during the summer months

The postman brought a surprise to Mrs M.B. Hille, Hemingford Road, Cambridge, when he arrived at the house with a parcel from Buckingham Palace. It was one of the gifts of foodstuffs sent to Princess Elizabeth from overseas, which she is distributing to elderly people and widows. Inside was a simple, informal letter, on Buckingham Palace notepaper in which the Princess referred to gifts of food received from overseas at the time of her wedding. "I want to distribute it as best I can", the letter continued, "and to share my good fortune with others. I therefore ask you to accept this parcel with my best wishes". A number of tins of food inside included chicken soup, "Prem", beans, coffee, cocoa, milk and chocolate pudding

By telephone, landline and Transatlantic radio beam the two Rotary Clubs of Cambridge, England and Cambridge, Ohio last night strengthened still further the great bonds of fellowship and friendship existing between them. The event took place in the Oak Room of the Dorothy Cafe at 5pm to coincide in point of time with the regular weekly luncheon of the Ohio club at 12 noon in the Pioneer Room of the Hotel Berwick. Over ninety Rotarians sat down on this side of the Atlantic to eat baked sugar cured ham, June peas, hot rolls and muffins, sliced Hawaiian pineapple, fruit cake and candy, with coffee and cigars also included in the Ohio club's generous and welcome gift. On the table stood a scarlet-coloured telephone. At 5.30 the 'phone bell rang, Post Office engineers in the room - which had been fitted with amplifier so that all present could hear the speeches - manipulated their controls and President Emburey greeted President R. Hartill of the Ohio Club over the Transatlantic phone

An unusual kind of mannequin parade for a fashion house was staged by Mitcham's last night when they held their annual social in the Oak Room of the Dorothy Cafe, Cambridge. The hushed, expectant, awestruck atmosphere of the genuine fashion parade was replaced by hilarious mirth as male members of the staff, suitably made up, and looking the last word in grace and charm "modelled" the very latest styles for the junior miss, schoolgirl, young matron and matron. Even lingerie was shown in the form of a glamourous housecoat. A delightful demonstration of the Rumba was given by Miss Valerie Redfern who departed from the sublime to the ridiculous to give a demonstration reminiscent of a well-known music hall act, of an Egyptian Sand Dance

Often it happens that a visitor to Cambridge says: "Well there's the University; what industries have you?" The answer is invariably on the lines "Oh nothing much - wireless and jam and so on". A visit to the "Cambridge at Work" exhibition in the Corn Exchange will give a much better insight into the activities at the wireless and jam factories, and the other industrial concerns, and will enable him to gain a true appreciation of the part that a light industrial centre like Cambridge is playing in the country's struggle. Pye Ltd are showing the latest in radio and television receivers.

Cambridgeshire has been well to the fore in implementing the proposals in the Children's Bill. Under the Bill responsibility for the care of children who have no normal home life is placed squarely on the shoulders of the local authority. I think I am right in saying that ours is one of the first County Council's to anticipate legislation. A Children's Committee has been set up, a full-time Children's officer appointed, an office established, and authorisation obtained for adding what staff is found necessary. The Committee has inherited a number of foster homes and the "Red House", Little Shelford and Ross Street Homes from the Public Assistance Committee. Council Chairman M.C. Burkitt said they were anxious that these homes shall be similar in atmosphere to an old-fashioned Victorian family

Her youthful charm drew spontaneous admiring remarks from the crowd which saw the Royal party leave. The Princess showed great interest in all she saw during her tour of the premises and asked several questions. She was obviously fascinated by the shop and its contents # c.02

Any local viewers of television might recently have seen a rather surprising cookery demonstration - during which fish and vegetables were cooked in the space of three minutes. A dispute over the possible revision of the boundary between Caldecote and Bourn was the subject of a public inquiry at Elsworth British Legion Hall. In 1946 the first parish council for Caldecote was elected and an undertaking entered into that the question of the boundary should receive attention. Caldecote village shop was, in fact, in Bourn parish, together with a number of other houses actually in Caldecote village. There was no dispute that they should be included in Caldecote who had given them telephonic and telegraphic facilities and provided educational facilities for the children. It had also included a special rule to enable the inhabitants to use Caldecote village hall. Once upon a time four members of the "Cambridge Daily News" staff decided that a certain James Pike and his team of "News of the World" Champions had ruled unchallenged in the realm of darts for far too long. And now after a brave attempt to topple them from their throne the four gallants from the C.D.N. are bound to admit that the time has not yet come for Cambridge's daily paper to de-throne these wizards of the dartboard ... Cambridgeshire Cottage Improvement Society have urged the Ministry of Health to give grants towards reconditioning buildings of outstanding beauty and historical interest. The Old Manor House at Fen Drayton was a building of this kind and reconditioning would enable three cottages to be made from two, one of the present cottages being much larger than was required. Water mains have recently been laid in the village and the property has been connected to the supply so that when reconditioning is possible modern conveniences will be practicable. A piped water supply will also shortly be available in Kingston, where the Society has two cottages, and later in Toft, though the main may be some distance from its property

With the glorious sun shining down on it, and the sheep quietly grazing in the surrounding meadow, the lovely old church at Great Abington was on Sunday re-opened after having been closed for nearly two years. It was in 1941 when a bomb fell on the bridge, which is at the present moment undergoing repairs, that the church suffered its first shock. Then one was dropped on the Land Settlement, an aircraft also crashed in the vicinity, and there were one or two other explosions nearby which finally necessitated the closing of the church in November 1946, as it was considered unsafe for public worship. The work of restoration was begun in that year, but then had to be stopped for a time until a few months ago when Messrs Rattee and Kett Ltd, of Cambridge, were able to re-start and complete it

Mr E. Farmer of Cambridge University gave a lecture to members of the Road Accident Prevention Council on the effect of alcohol on drivers. A number of moderate drinkers were selected to train and operate a special machine using skills required in driving a motor car. At a certain stage in the training alcohol was consumed under the normal conditions in the bar of a licensed house. Operation of the machine afterwards showed that men were slightly better after taking alcohol than before. Mr Farmer thought that the taking of alcohol allowed a great concentration on the thing they were actually engaged in. Another factor was fatigue. A small quantity of alcohol would help to overcome this, as the effects of fatigue ran contrary to the effects of alcohol. "But it should be remembered that 'moderation' is the key word" he said

Describing Pye Ltd as "a fairly important company in the industrial life of Cambridge" Mr C.O. Stanley said that during the war the firm employed nearly 12,000 people, today they had between three and four thousand. He went on to speak of the firm's association with the University - one "so happy and so close that I believe it will always make a mark with the people working with this business". Professor Sir Lawrence Bragg said he had always been very interested in the relation between science and industry and the co-operation that existed during the war showed there were contributions to be made from both sides. He hoped this co-operation would continue in the future # c.27.1

Concern as to whether men at the European Voluntary Workers camp, Bottisham, were getting their correct ration of food was expressed by the Chairman of the Bottisham magistrates when three of them appeared before the courts on charges involving bread units. The proceedings took one-and-a-half hours due to the fact that two of the men spoke German and the other Juoslavian. Each case therefore had to be dealt with separately. It was said that there has been almost a trade amongst the Displaced Persons with regard to bread. . They have been going into Cambridge very frequently and been obtaining the bread at the shops there and taking it back to the camp where they sell it at the rate of from 2s.6d to 3s. a lb.

A remarkable increasing in the lending activities of the Cambridge Building Society was reported at the annual meeting. The average debt was £477. The figures were all the more remarkable when one considered that the whole of the advances made since the war were on houses already build. The Chairman said "it is a sad state of affairs that since the termination of hostilities we have made only nine advances to members to build their own homes. The demand for houses is as great as ever and there would be no limit to our lending capacity if the supply was there. It is for this reason our secretary has had to refuse many thousands of pounds from would-be investors"

Abbey East Social club was formally opened at the Old School, Fen Ditton. In October 1942 it was decided at the Wardens' Post, Newmarket Road, to form a committee to make plans for a club to meet the social needs of the area. In the war people realised they were enjoying something they had not had before - good fellowship, companionship and getting to know the people who lived next door. Permission had been given to use an old A.R.P. post near the borough cemetery and functions had been arranged from there. The Deputy Mayor said "I do hope it will be a very successful centre for those on the east side of the bridge. Some years before the recent war, Cambridge's New Theatre, having been a "live" house for over 40 years, not only ceased to be "new" in years but suffered a "sea change" into something neither rich nor rare - a theatre turned cinema - and saddled too with the hybrid title "Theatre Cinema". This was the beginning of a period that might be described as a winter solstice, for the building eventually closed, and during the war it was in the hands of the military. But now, after another brief life as a cinema, it has at last reverted to the type of entertainment for which it was built, and the merry band of players which yesterday presented the first professional "live" show to be seen in the theatre for many years are the successors of a long line of theatre folk, who during the palmy years passed across the New Theatre's stage in glorious array. The large audience who crowded into the building for the

Sir - in answer to your correspondent "Still waiting" the simple answer is that in December 1945 we had received applications from 1,700 ex-servicemen who were in temporary accommodation and that we have since that date succeeded in building just about 800 houses. I sympathise with "Mother of Two". Lodgings are almost impossible to get with a family of two. "Still Hoping" was married in 1942 and only put his name down in 1946. Dr Alex Wood, chairman of the Cambridge Housing Committee spoke of the factors which had largely created the housing problem in Cambridge. There had been an influx of a very large number of people whose property elsewhere was destroyed during the war and they had settled in the area. The second "complication" was that the University was being urged by the Government to take larger numbers of students, thus adding to the competition for the housing accommodation available. There must have been many conjectures as to how many cycles do pass up and down St Andrew's street, Cambridge, in the course of a day. A special cable apparatus used by Cambridge Borough Police yesterday recorded an average of 1,400 cycles per hour. During the peak period from 12.30 to 1.30 pm nearly 2,000 cyclists were clocked. Motor traffic figures are negligible by comparison only 460 vehicles an hour being "clocked" regularly over the whole day. The census was organised in connection with the one-way traffic system which will shortly be brought into operation

The watching eyes of Britain's air defence went into action on Sunday in the biggest-scale Royal Observer Corps activity in the district since the war. Observer posts were manned at Cherry Hinton, Linton, Caxton, St Ives, Abbots Ripton, Littleport and elsewhere following the movements of jet fighters, Spitfires, Lancaster and Lincoln bombers and other types of aircraft numbering over 100

Sir - "In reply to a gaily-coloured invitation to have my eight-month old daughter immunised from diphtheria, free of charge, I took her to the Auckland Road Clinic, Cambridge. I had experience of this clinic during the war as an ambulance driver. What I found horrified me. I found makeshift surroundings completely unsuited and of dubious cleanliness and that instead of the babies being isolated at this special time the room was occupied by 20 or 30 school children, some with scabs on their faces, some with colds, some hardly clean, all waiting for treatment. I waited for half an hour from the time of my appointment and as the doctor had not yet arrived I decided not to risk the baby's health any longer in such an environment and went home. If we are to have any kind of National Health Service that will work this kind of thing will have to stop" - Margaret Phillips

The purpose of her visit was to "christen" a hard court presented to the town. Travelling from London by train Kay intended to get out at Cambridge, but overshot her target and found herself in Ely. She booked a taxi to take her back to Soham but it says little for the local knowledge of the Ely taxi drivers for the car went straight through the village - which has one of the longest main streets in Cambs - and on to Newmarket. Eventually she arrived at Soham, where a mystified crowd awaited, only three-quarters of an hour late

Sir - the one-way system has certainly created danger spots at the corner of St John's Street, Cambridge. They could be remedied by putting traffic lights there back into operation. The only alternative would be to divert all traffic into Petty Cury. Every user of Petty Cury will have to agree that it is already far too narrow even for the present volume of traffic - pedestrians are crowded into the roadway and bus drivers often have their work cut out to squeeze their buses through at walking pace. Short of some more radical plan (e.g. banning all motor traffic from the streets round Market Hill) I think the one-way system is as good as we shall get - A.E.B. Owen Concern at the possibility of parts of Cambridgeshire countryside being taken over by the R.A.F. for practice bombing ranges was voiced at a meeting in Trinity College. They propose to set up practice bombing ranges at Babraham (near Duxford aerodrome), East Hatley (near Bassingbourn and Bourn) and North of Whittlesey. These ranges, it said, are used from time to time for dropping marker bombs only and when the red flag is flying and the footpaths across are blocked. Sir - I have just had the pleasure of reading your Diamond Jubilee supplement. It took me back in thought half a century when Billy Gates sold ice cream from his gay barrow - a halfpenny for a shallow glass and a penny for a deeper one, with a choice of flavour - strawberry, vanilla or mixed. There were no refinements, neither wafer nor spoon: we used our tongues and Billy dipped the used glass in a pail of water. It was a primitive service. "Out of every four marriages celebrated in Cambridge this week the ratio of breakage will be one" the Rev John Crowlesmth, director of the Cambridge Marriage Guidance Centre said. He gave five main reasons. The transition in the pattern of family life in which the father was only one of a circle in which his authority counted for nothing. "The wheel has turned quite obviously and we men are now the submissive sex", he said. He also considered that attempts to get married women into industry were in the long run going to be a fatal mistake in the development and encouragement of family life. Sexual ignorance and the wrong sexual technique, housing difficulties and hasty marriages were other causes and the fifth was the lack of personal conviction about the meaning of life.

Standing waste deep in the shaded waters of the River Lark in the Cambridgeshire village of Isleham, a young Baptist minister yesterday performed a baptismal service within five minutes walks of the exact spot where Charles Haddon Spurgeon, most famous of all Baptist preachers, was baptised in 1850. Pastor A.G. Ashdown addressed the congregation, took off his jacket and as the crowd took up the words of the hymn "Happy Days" he waded into the deepest part of the river. The four candidates, who had already confessed their faith, were then led into the river. One by one they were completely immersed under the water

Radio is to be brought into place shortly to help Cambridgeshire fire fighters. Two fire engines and four staff cars at the Newmarket Road Headquarters are to be fitted with a V.H.F.-type speech transmitter and receiver, similar to those fitted to R.A.F. planes. The fixed 12-watt transmitter will also be used by the police force to originate their message operation. The two fire engines fitted with radio are the ones normally sent out immediately on receipt of a fire call. The "chaotic condition" of Cambridge traffic was explained by Ald W.J. Taylor at a meeting of the County Council when he said: "They have tried to bring traffic into the town for the sake of the business of the town. They never thought to plan the town properly and the widening of some of the streets has been the biggest mistake there ever was. They talked about the ring road but took great care they never made it so that motorists should come in and spend their money". Councillor Dennard said the one-way traffic system, with streets used as car parks, had caused chaos

The experiment of a socialist village was advocated by Cambs MP, A.E. Stubbs, in the House of Commons. "If I had my way I would take land and put it down to small holdings, properly equipped with buildings and so on. With the present shortage of labour the farmers can never get the manpower to farm it properly, but the land could be properly dealt with on the basis of a socialist village equipped a school and modern amenities. The roads which have been built by the Ministry of Agriculture in the fens are all falling to pieces. It is about time something was done, once and for all, to give the agricultural producers a square deal. Public representatives, including members of the Cambridge University and Town Waterworks Company attended the annual inspection of the water works. The first place of call was the Fleam Dyke Pumping Station where they saw the massive machinery which is responsible for extracting water from a well in the ground. This is the main source of supply for 110,000 people. The daily consumption is 3½ million gallons and if it were necessary to bring water into Cambridge by hauling it it would take 23,000 150-gallon horse drawn water tanks stretching in an unending procession of 130 miles to bring it into Cambridge each day. Since 1920, when the pumps were first taken into use they had pumped 31,000 million gallons which is enough to flood the whole of the Borough of Cambridge to a depth of 12 ft # c.24.2

It would be impossible to run out a separate pair of wires every time somebody asked for a telephone. Sir - Many letters have been written as to the filthy state of the River, but still there are weeds, dead cats, dead fowl and every other sort of refuse floating on the surface, including the oily substance that continually oozes from the gas works. It you stir the mud oil rises to the surface. Fish caught the other day stink of the oil. Isn't it possible to filter this before it gets to the river? Further there is a children's playground at the entrance to Stourbridge Common. On Monday it was occupied by nearly 50 cows and heifers. Tuesday by five horses. This is no exception - "Vigilant"

Mademoiselle Malandain died at her home, "La Roche", Panton Street, Cambridge. She had been seriously ill since January when to the great regret of many pupils and friends of the Perse Girls' School "La Roche" had to be closed to boarders. Mademoiselle first came in 1906 to supervise the education of the family of the late Dr Griffiths. Her lively methods of teaching soon attracted other pupils and she set up in company with Mdlee Barthee a small house in Panton Street. Recognising her abilities Miss Kennett with great wisdom invited her to join the teaching staff of the Perse Girls School in about 1916 where she worked with great vigour and liveliness until late in 1947. Meanwhile she was teaching at Kings Choir School and running a school boarding house for Perse girls

One of the defendants said, "I have seen other people going up to the site, taking away timber, and not getting into trouble for it, so I thought it would be all right". Another said he was walking across the site of the Newmarket Road camp when two Irishmen working there stopped him and asked if he wanted to buy some timber. The five Cambridge laundries which handle the college washing when the men are up must be having something of a respite just now. During term they handle something like 150,000 pieces every week. Stiff shirts and white waistcoats are also a feature of the college wash - especially during May Week when hundreds have to be dealt with. The limited wardrobes of present day students due to rationing, calling for a quick return of the work, is another problem with which these laundries have to deal. Before commercial laundries came into being the students' washing was usually done at home by the bedmakers. Each would undertake to wash for 20 to 30 men, and collect the bundles in a handcart. Village carriers too used to come in to collect washing which was undertaken by cottage women in nearby country areas

He saw two men bending over a slot weighing machine, both ran off but he followed the defendant on his bicycle and eventually caught him. Next day a small automatic pistol was found lying on a wall. Though many crops in Cambridgeshire have been badly laid by the rain, there has not as yet been a big wastage in the county through the weather. E.R. The need for utilising Chesterton hospital for the elderly and infirm people of Cambridgeshire and of housing casuals in some other part of the county was discussed at a meeting of the Board of Governors of the United Cambridge Hospitals. A great hardship is being imposed on people who are old - they are literally living in houses in some villages in semi-starvation and dirt. There is no hope for them living in the way they are". Young children running out of a Huntingdonshire school stopped their laughing and playing when they heard three shots ring out and saw their 22-year-old teacher fall dying in the playground. The assistant headmistress ran forward to her aid, but she died in her arms. Nearby lay a man with a bullet wound in his head. A revolver was found on the ground a few yards away. He was taken to Huntingdon County Hospital in a critical condition and died without regaining consciousness. An inquest decided she had been murdered by her ex-fiancée.

Several million people in Great Britain ate their Sunday dinner to a radio broadcast of Cambridge accents and comments from the clubroom of Histon's Barley Mow. Jake Smith told the "Country Magazine" programme some stories of his pumping station during the 1947 floods - how it was swamped out and subsequently pumped non-stop for 336 hours. "Everything went through the pumps", he said, "including a tremendous lot of fish". Fred Toates told of his job of getting rid of rats and rabbits, with wasps and hornets as a summer-time addition. "Funny thing how the hornets get into all the "posh" houses - Doctor's and parsons and such places. Mrs Young Nightingale said "I've always done gleaning ever since I can remember. The forthcoming Territorial Army recruiting campaign will include women as well as men. We prefer to think of them as A.T.S., and to refer to them under a title to which they brought so much credit during the war. What is being formed in Cambridge is E Company no1 (eastern) group which will, presumably be very similar to its "Mother" unit, formed at Cambridge in 1938 - a general duties company. A local Commander is a great asset to any Territorial Unit and E Company have secured Miss A.M. Hales, who was born in Linton # c.45.8

References to the present position regarding the European Volunteer Workers was made at a meeting of the Cambridge Employment Committee. At Warboys a volunteer camp had been opened for the accommodation of volunteer workers in agriculture during the holidays and over 1,750 volunteers had spent periods in the camp since it was opened. The committee expressed anxiety with regard to the number of European volunteer workers unplaced at the West Wratting holding hostel and Mr Harding said he considered that the object for which these people were recruited had now been fulfilled and that recruitment from the Continent should now cease

Speaking on the Radio "Country Magazine" broadcast from Histon Reg Robinson, a Babraham farmer, said "You'll only get one quart out of a waggoner", which had a similar meaning to "a pint out of a pint pot". The "waggoner" was a grey china mug out of which the waggoners of bygone days used to have a quart when they stopped at a public house. "The last one I saw was at the King's Head, Sawston," Mr Robinson added. “Some of them used to have a pattern with a black line round the top". I wonder if there are any to be found in local "pubs" these days?

The fear that the centre of gravity of the new Fen county to be formed from Cambridgeshire, Hunts., the Isle of Ely and the Soke of Peterborough would be at Peterborough and so cause Cambs villages to become forgotten backwater outposts, was expressed by the Chairman of the Parish Councils Association. The Boundary Commission have agreed to amalgamate the four counties and make a big new Fen county, to take Cambridge out of it and make it a new kind of county borough. “Histon and such like are quite big places at Shire Hall now, but we will have only a small voice at Peterborough", he said

Speaking at the Cambs Parish Councils Association conference the agricultural adviser to the Foreign Office said there were two reasons why rural life was going to change fundamentally during the next 10 or 20 years. Food was going to be much harder to come by, and was going to cost much more, and the agricultural strength of the country was going to be of far greater weight than it had. We must make people realise that those who live in it are not "poor backward hicks" but real contributors. The country should realise its importance compared with the urban side of our life

The Ministry of Health advised Cambridgeshire Housing committee that the tender of Cambridge firm amounting to £11,111 should be accepted for the erection of eight houses at Swavesey, as this was the lowest based on Cambridge rates of pay. The work by another local firm was based on local Swavesey rates and would have involved additional expense. The vice-chairman said, "Not one foundation has been laid. Lowest tenders were accepted but some builders, for reasons unknown, found they had forgotten some items which they should have included, and they refused to go on with the houses on the prices they tendered. Sites are ready, plans passed and 1,000 people are waiting for 102 homes. Either the building industry is overloaded with work, or they want too much money for building our houses"

Sixty-four years' service as a cab driver is a fact of which 79-year-old Mr George Clark of Gloucester Terrace, Cambridge, can be justly proud. It was one day in 1884 when the young George, at the age of 15 first drove a cab for his father. Finding he liked the occupation he continued with it and has driven

Pre-war they employed 3-400 people. At the war's end they had 3,700 on the payroll. They had purchased 7 houses and had converted an office block to flats to house a further 12 workers but it had reached a limit to which it could tie up capital in housing. There was a problem of workers lodged in the town who had families elsewhere. Sir - The time is over-due for drawing attention to the scandalous conditions of many of our ancient rights-of-way and footpaths. From Bury Farm, Stapleford a public footpath leads across a fine stretch of upland to Babraham. During the war the stone and iron bridge was removed where the path led across the Babraham river and neither of the parish councils have taken any action about it. I suggest that every village school should construct a home-made map of the village on which was delineated every public path. The old inhabitants would supply the necessary information. Many in Cambridge and county will join us in deeply regretting the death of Lieut-Col Frederick Newton Drake Digby who will be remembered chiefly for his years of devoted service to the Territorial Army. He took over command of the Cambridgeshire Regiment in 1936 and held this post until the embodiment of the Territorial Army in August 1939. These years in which war clouds were looming were important in the Regiment's history and it was the training it received then which was to stand it in good stead during the grim conflict and ordeals that were to follow. Col Digby was unable to accompany it on active service, but was among the first to greet his former comrades at the docks when they returned home from the Far East. He played a prominent part in the welcome home celebrations that followed victory. # c.45.6

The suggestion that Cambridge might become pioneer in a home care scheme for hospital patients was made by Dr Banks, principal medical officer to the ministry of health. "Quite a number of patients in hospitals need not really be there. Some are detained in hospital because they cannot be nursed at home, some even because they have no suitable home to go to. Others have relatively minor ailments which could equally well be treated at home if adequate home nursing facilities were available. Others are incurable patients for whom the hospital can do little. People get better in their own homes who had lost the will to live nursed in hospital". When the Queen stood before the Vice Chancellor in Cambridge Senate House today to receive the Honorary Degree of Doctor of Law she was not only a Queen receiving an Honour but also a symbol of the passing of a 700-years-old "tradition" in the university. For, during the whole of the University's history no Queen - and no other woman - has ever before had a degree conferred upon her, because until the recent changes in the statutes giving women full membership the conferring of such an honour was not possible. For what is probably the first time in the 360 years that gowns have been worn by students of Cambridge University, they are being regarded from the fashion viewpoint. This was the natural development of the wearing of them by women, for, while men seem happy enough wearing their gowns, which are often torn and dirty, slung on anyhow, the more dress-conscious sex was bound to look at the matter from a different angle. At Paston House school speech day the Headmistress, Mother Paul, gave a brief sketch of the development of the school during the past 50 years, for it was just half a century ago when it was founded. She referred with regret that so many applications for vacancies had to be refused as kindergarten places were filled up to 1951. The premises were still far from adequate, for an assembly hall, a permanent gymnasium, a studio and a library were all needed. The war did not dislocate the work of the school as much as might have been expected, but it roused special interest in nursing and first aid. # c.36.5

It is a good many years since there was a circus at the New Theatre, which makes this week's visit of Don Ross's Royal Imperial Circus all the more welcome. Everything that makes a circus is here – with the one notable exception of the elephants. There are the horses, dogs, monkeys, wire-walkers, the trapeze artiste, the lions, and the clowns – even two performing geese (said to be the only ones in the world). All the acts are interspersed with the appearance of the clowns, Edgar Cooke, Little Alf Pratley and Rabbit who also appears with a trampoline (one of those bouncing affairs) and invites members of the audience to have a go. # c.76.8

Cambridgeshire is the home base of some 50% of the RAF aircraft and crews at present bringing help on the airlift to Berlin. Oakington, one of the war-time Pathfinder airfields, and Waterbeach, are the two stations on which Dakota squadrons taking part in the lift have their home base. Another Cambridge link is that the commander of the squadron equipped with Hastings transport aircraft is a Cambridge man, Squadron-Leader P. J. Finlayson of Milton Road. He was the first man to pilot a Hastings carrying coal into Gatow, one of the Berlin termini of the lift.

The first important milestone in Cambridge post-war housing drive was reached when the Mayor opened the council's'1,000th house – an "Easiform", at 27 Peverell Road on the Newmarket road site, where tenant, Mrs Betson, was waiting. Beforehand they had been taken on a tour of some of the principal housing estates in the town and saw estates at all stages of development - ranging from the neat, well-established looking one at Trumpington, only lacking the shops which will come one day, to the unfinished but partly-tenanted. At these mothers with perambulators have to be helped through the mud, and children kept in wellington boots. # c.23

A further step towards the prevention of flooding in the fen area has been taken in the building of the Welches Dam pumping station which was officially opened and put into action. It had been decided that the reconstruction of the Low bank would be too expensive and there would be a continuous sinking of the peat fenlands behind. Comparative costs showed that a pumping station would be cheaper that building up the bank and be the most economical solution. # c.29

A minute or two after midnight on Christmas Eve between 60 and 70 men sat down to what must been the first Christmas dinner served in Cambridge this year. They were members of the night operating staff at the Telephone Exchange, and they chose that unconventional hour because their periods of duty make it difficult for them to hold a social function at a more normal time. They were served with turkey, plum pudding and mince pies as they sat at their switchboards.

Cambridge children have rarely been so well catered for with pantomime as they are this year, with two. Criticism of the pre-war council was voiced at Chesterton Rural District Council when the future allocation of permanent houses was discussed. A lot of the troubles encountered before the war, such as sewerage and drainage faced them now. Mr R.W. Mr Walkling retorted that the council's record as regards housing was second to none, although sewerage was not quite such an easy job

An inquiry into a proposed sewerage disposal scheme for Linton was told that piped water was afforded in 1935 with a condition that a scheme for sewage would be proceeded with within five years, but the war stopped it. March, the month of winds, came in like a lion – with a gale that touched 82 mph this morning. There were the usual casualties amongst trees and chimney pots but the narrowest escape was that experienced by Mr D. Pulford, an agricultural engineer, at the Chequers Inn, Cottenham. He was uninjured when a 20-feet chimney stack collapsed and about half a ton of bricks fell onto his bed, driving its legs through the floor of the room.

He gave notice in December and after his departure it was found that a number of bottles were missing from the wine cellars and others had been partially emptied and refilled with tea, red ink and water. Sir – the trouble with the Four Lamps roundabout is its bad design. It was put down many years ago and allows traffic to approach at too fast a rate. The new roundabouts on Chesterton road with its beautiful flower gardens and the one where Lensfield joins Trumpington road are of better design because they slow all traffic down to walking pace. A much greater terror is that most insane junction, Pembroke Street and Mill Lane with Trumpington Street. How people avoid being killed daily is always a marvel to me. It is pleasant, as they end, to be able to bid farewell to the various war-time restrictions which have particularly affected the housewife. I have been able to write an obituary to bread, jam and sweet rationing. Now comes the end of clothes rationing after eight long, weary years. The ending of the coupon system is hardly likely to lead to an orgy of buying. It is only too sadly true that our buying is conditioned rather by the contents of our purses than our coupon books.

The Humber Hawk, newest car to come off the production line, is one of a group of cars and lorries displayed at Messrs Herbert Robinson's garage, Regent Street, Cambridge in their first show since the war ended. Other types include the Humber Pullman Super Snipe, Sunbeam-Talbot 90 and Hillman Minx. If you care to put your name on the end of about 600 other people you might get your new car in a few years time! Meanwhile, until new cars become more plentiful we must be satisfied just with looking at them through such shows

A conference of the Council for the Preservation of Rural England was told that the 1947 Agricultural Act would change the appearance of the countryside. It was going to result in a very large amount of corrugated iron and corrugated asbestos and the disappearance of a good deal of thatch, because thatch cost a good deal to repair. With petrol more easily available, more people would want to live in the countryside. "I believe it is important to encourage them because it will make cultural life in the villages more varied and richer", said Mr Pease, vice chairman.

Cambridge was the scene of a "ceremony of the keys" about midnight on May 12th when the borough pindar, Mr Bill Clee, went round a number of Cambridge commons unlocking the gates so that in accordance with rights dating back hundreds of years those who wished could have access to the commons to graze their stock. Travelling on an auto-cycle he unlocked no fewer than 17 gates on his journey. I gather there were no queues of stock waiting to sample the fresh green grass. There is a Wild West touch about the animals on the commons now, for each one is branded to indicate that the owner has paid the required fee.

A "Happy Homes" exhibition was opened at the Co-operative hall, Burleigh Street. Several of the exhibits are of goods which are being made again for the first time since the war. One, a welcome sight, is the man's fitted wardrobe, with shelves for his underwear, ties and hats, and sliding rods and rails for suits and footwear. One exhibit which drew the women, was a cream and green electrically-driven washing machine, with automatic wringer, which does the family wash in an hour and a half, at a cost of about 1d in electricity a week.

Cambridge town football club's 1948-49 season achieved even better results than its record predecessor. In all the club won no fewer than seven trophies. It is not surprising that another exceptional season saw the "gate" figures soar to greater heights and no fewer than 125,000 fans filled the stand or lined the terraces. The biggest disappointment was the club's failure to gain admittance to the Isthmian league. Of the veteran players George Dean, surely the most virile secretary-player in the game, had an outstanding season on the field.

When the custom of having a luncheon after the proclamation of Reach fair was revived on Monday, Counc G. Edwards recalled that 25 years ago the Mayor was a brewer and an additional ceremony he performed was the opening of a new village pump. This led him to remark that he did not quite understand why a brewer should be asked to open a pump; he could have understood it if a dairyman had been asked to perform the ceremony!

At the rate of two a minute some 370 men employed by the Cambridge Instrument Company voluntarily underwent a free examination making possible the early discovery and treatment of any trouble in their chests. Facilities for such a high-speed search are the result of the war-time development of mass radiography, which enables X-ray photographs to be taken without fuss. Already some 4,000 men and 600 women have taken advantage of the opportunity. Women attend for X-ray separately from men, and are each provided with a freshly-laundered chest cover.

One impression gained in the short time they have been here is the high prices of children's' clothes. Another was the shocked reaction of the assistant when they asked for a piece of ham in a local store.

The story of the swans at Milton gravel pits is a tragic one. It begins in the spring, when a pair of mute swans built a nest, which was robbed in April. A second clutch of eggs was laid but the sitting pen (hen bird) was stoned to death. The cob took over the incubation and sat for three weeks within six feet of the decaying corpse of his mate. Finally, last week, the lone bird was driven from the nest, and the eggs were smashed, although they must have been nearly hatching. Bird life at the pits and on the adjacent sewage farm is protected.

The car, a 20 hp Alvis first mounted the pavement on the stone bridge near Brooklands Ave, where it knocked over the three women. Finally, it struck a cyclist, whose machine was dragged along under the car, but who himself escaped serious injuries

Cambridge county agricultural show fully lived up to its well-earned reputation of being one of the best one-day events of its kind in the country. The show covered 45 acres of ground at Trumpington that will form part of the site for the Royal Show in 1951 and can with truth be described as a "dress rehearsal" for the country's premier agricultural event. Banker's row, smart caravan banking establishments – emphasised the fact that this was a business occasion. There was an unusual machinery demonstration where Messrs Sindall, public works contractors, had several giant bulldozers and excavators working in a pit.

The audience was on its feet in a second, and there was a spontaneous burst of clapping and a real cheer. The fire caused some anxiety since it occurred in one of Cambridge's three danger zones. The May Balls have brought out a crop of new evening dresses. White, ideal for a summer dance was a favourite colour and diaphanous floating tulle tell to the fore as a material. I noticed several gaily striped or checked stiff taffetas, and a few with big flower patters, but plain colours predominated. Tiered skirts – three or even four of five tiers – are back. One or two of the ladies had fringed, silk shawls, draped over their shoulders and I noticed one carrying a pink feather fan

"I am quite sure that we suffer from an over materialistic outlook on life and are much too frightened to spend money making places more beautiful to live in". Such was the opinion expressed by Mr H. Watching from an upper window as the May Ball dancers paced backwards and forwards along the awning-covered pathway to the marquee, I was forcibly struck by the almost universally bad deportment. There was a conspicuous absence of the erect, dignified bearing thought so essential in our mothers and grandmothers' day. Skirts which needed lifting from the ground were grabbed up in the most ungraceful way, and held somewhere about mid-calf. Although a number of the dresses were really beautiful much of their effect was thereby lost. Good deportment is of course an art. It seems a pity that it is no longer looked upon as a necessary art for a young girl to master

"If the people will not come into us, we will go out them." Such seems to be the view of the Cambridge Young Conservatives who held the first of two open-air summer meetings on Parker's Piece. Saturday strollers stopped out of curiosity and stayed out of interest to hear several young people express their views on the political situation. Most of the listeners were civilian but servicemen were represented together with two Americans who seemed to be rather baffled by it all. On the whole, the crowd was orderly and there were only one or two hecklers. The greatest opposition was from the appeals for catches or l.b.w. by nearby cricketers

A few yards from the Cambridge council chamber where the Aldermen and councillors gather to discuss the affairs of the town their wives met on Monday afternoon. Before the Mayor had completed for first ride on the super-speedway, after Midsummer Fair had been proclaimed, long queues were filing past gay looking stalls where assistants were doling out half-pounds of rock, nougat and sweets of all varieties, as fast as they could. Sir - On 2nd July two Hornet aircraft flew over King's College in perfect visibility at a height of well below 200 feet. My two children were very badly frightened indeed. I feel certain that even at the phenomenal speed of 400 mph in a somewhat out-of-date aircraft, a pilot should be able to avoid the centre of a town the size of Cambridge. Sitting in the bar of the Jolly Brewers in Union Rd, Cambridge, Jasper Maskelyne, the famous magician who is appearing at the New Theatre, saw the landlord take up his banjo and prepare to play. "When I heard how well he could play I decided he was certainly good enough for the stage", he said. As a result the licensee, Mr Percy Jackson, will appear at the first house on Friday night and may be heard later over the radio. Mr Jackson strummed and sang a popular Western number and showed that his skill is well worth a wider audience than that of his bar, crowded though that gets when he leads a singsong on Saturday nights.

Sir – Many of your readers will be perturbed to hear of the recent happening on Coe Fen camp. The council has forced the removal of all chickens and rabbits kept by tenants. The real reason in my view is the marring of the view from Trumpington road by the camp. He was one of the few who did not realise that sweets became rationed again from Sunday. Smith's St Ives branch) persuaded his superiors to open a branch in the Hemingfords, little did he know he was soon to open a shop, unique in the whole of the Smiths organisation in as much as it is their only shop with a thatched roof. For many years it was the village bakery, owned by Mr George Darlow. When he retired 10 years ago the shop as such fell into disuse, and now with a coat of bright green paint on the exterior, and books where once the loaves and flour stood, this little shop has come back again with a new lease of life.

An author once remarked that Cambridge was unique for the manner in which its population parked their countless bicycles - "Cambridge wise" he called it, thereby implying that local inhabitants adopted an air of supreme nonchalance, when, with a careless flick of the foot, they balance their machines on the edge of the pavement, suspended on one pedal - and not much of that. Our reporter saw two cycle accidents within five minutes. In one case a cycle fell against a double-decker bus as it passed, and in the other, a machine toppled over when there was nothing near it. In both cases the cycles were damaged. Six weeks has already passed since the day two skilled local craftsmen, Mr Walter Hall and his son, first started on their great task, which is expected to take at least another week. To the layman this may seem a very long time to take in cleaning it, but those who know anything at all about organs will realise the amount of work that is actually involved. Sir - None of our streets in Cambridge is wide enough to allow vehicles to be parked all down one side, as they do now. Petty Cury, on a Saturday especially, is almost a death-trap. The pavements are not wide enough for people to walk more than two abreast; therefore they walk on the road, thus giving bus drivers in particular a nightmare. This could be relieved to a certain extent if there were no vehicles parked all down one side. I suggest a big improvement would be the abolishing of all street parking and a municipal car park made on Midsummer common – Frederick Prior

Magistrates at Cambridge were faced with the problem of defining whether using petrol for towing a hare round a dog-tracing track came under the category of driving for pleasure. P.S. At the commencement of a race, the lorry would be started up, driving the rear wheels round, which would in turn wind in the cord to which the hare was attached. Defendant said he had petrol for use in connection with greyhound racing and for domestic and pleasure purposes. As far as he was concerned his pleasure came from using the car at the race meetings. "Are the County Health Committee washing their hands of conditions in Fowlmere?" asked Counc. Mrs R. Briggs. "There are at least 200 Poles living there in the most squalid conditions possible and liable to be a source of disease to others in the village". A Polish speaking nurse was needed to overcome the language difficulty as doctors were finding it a complete waste of time trying to treat Polish children without any knowledge of the language. The Polish families had squatted on the site of a disused aerodrome. Now they were subjects of the country, they should be absorbed into the population and enjoy the amenities of the place where they were living

The hope that it would be "a very long time" before Cambridge University elected a permanent Vice Chancellor was expressed by the Master of Christ's, Dr C.E. Raven. He said that occasionally one did get the almost perfect holder of that office, but in the main such men either had not sufficient character to run such a great administrative machine, or they had so much that no one else got a word in hedgeways! "You cannot get rid of a permanent Vice Chancellor unless he is definitely immoral or definite insane!" the speaker added.

The county planning committee's decision to remove permission for the construction of a 30-house estate at Upware was criticised. There were 6,000 acres of land beyond Upware and there was a danger of them all going out of cultivation unless the farm workers got the houses they demanded.

This would be nothing short of a national scandal, but men could not be persuaded to go back to the land unless they were given amenities – water, electricity and particularly houses.

A great worker in the field of women's suffrage has died. Mrs Edith Bethune-Baker devoted her life to the advancement of women's suffrage. When she first came to live in Cambridge she joined the small suffrage society, the first meeting of which was held at Christ's College. On one occasion she spend 11 hours on a cross-country journey to address a meeting of 12 women. After the suffrage battle was won she carried on the work to secure equality for women. Although firm and courageous in her stand, she was essentially gentle and courteous

The new premises, tastefully furnished in a style fitted to the dignity of Cambridge's most distinguished thoroughfare will help the proprietors in the education of the public in the niceties of wine drinking. Meals – lunches and dinners – will be served in a dining room on the first floor.

Construction has now commenced on a new roundabout at the junction of Hills Road and Station Road, Cambridge. Proposals are being discussed for an alternative site for the war memorial. Site one: the memorial to remain in its present position in the eastern corner of the traffic roundabout. The dignity of the memorial might be marred to some extent by traffic signs. Two: memorial to be moved to the centre of the new roundabout. Three: the memorial to be moved to a position in front of the entrance to the Botanic Gardens, nearly at right-angle to Station Road so the statue of the soldier will still face the town centre. This site would provide a restful haven away from traffic and the memorial would not be marred by traffic signs.

A well-known Cambridge dance band musician was alleged to have told a detective "If you smoke the stuff (Indian hemp) it assists in playing hot rhythm". When police searched his clothing they found three packets of African marihuana. He said it bought it off somebody in the West End for 15s. A law student from Trinity College said he went to a party and was offered a home-made cigarette. It tasted slightly of herbal tobacco. He was told "This will make you rock".

The quietest Guy Fawkes night "rag" long-service Cambridge police officers can remember passed off without even a street lamp being extinguished – another "within living memory" record. A crowd gathered on the Market Square by 7pm and fireworks were thrown. A police car which arrived on the scene radioed for reinforcements. These shepherded the crowd off the square. After that police posted at the entrances to the square prevented people entering the area. Early in the evening a few rotten eggs were thrown, and a smoke bomb exploded in the Sidney Street area. These incidents, and the intermittent throwing of fireworks, constituted about the only "excitement" of the evening, though there was an occasion when a "bulldog" pursued a man at full speed in front of the Guildhall.

Sir – I would like to voice my opinion of the canteen prices of Messrs Pye Ltd. Main meal (choice of two) 1s., was 10d. Sweet 4d., was 3d. Bread & butter ¾d a slice, was ½d. I fail to see why employees wish to take a matter like this to the Trades Council, as these prices still constitute the lowest that can be obtained in normal factory canteens. We now get a choice of two main meals and two sweets as against one in the past, also we now get bread and butter, instead of margarine. I am sure that the staff themselves can only say that the meals now worth every penny of the rise in cost – W.E. Wilmhurst

It seeks to empower the Gt Ouse Catchment Board to construct works and acquire land. The total catchment area covers over two million acres of which 400 acres were fenland, the richest agricultural land in the country. The average annual value of the crops grown on the fenland was £50 an acre, compared with an average of £25 for the rest of the country. Cambridge magistrates were told the story of how two baby girls – aged one and 2½ were found on their own late at night in a room which was "filthy" and "evil-smelling. An NSPCC said one bedroom was completely empty. In the other there was a bare flood and mattress. A new cot in the room had obviously never been used. Downstairs the house was untidy and smelt. The few pieces of crockery in the house were all dirty. A small bowl used for bathing the children was much too small and was kept in the yard in a filthy condition. There was no coal or other means of heating in the house.

"Ben", the talking dog owned by Mr Alfred Brissenden of Royston, is to make another broadcast. Now eight years old "Ben" will appear on the Light Programme. It will be remembered that "Ben" is no stranger to the microphone, having appeared in television "Picture Page" in September 1946, when he almost "let down the side" by mistaking a fellow artiste's fur coat for a cat. Eminent veterinary surgeons have examined "Ben's" vocal apparatus and have been considerably impressed by his accomplishment. Unfortunately when making his NBC broadcast in 1946, "Ben" developed mike-fright and it is hoped his performance on Thursday will reproduce perfectly for the delight of his many fans.

The character of Hauxton Gap would be altogether destroyed if ten houses were built there, it was claimed at a Planning Inquiry when Mr Baynes appealed against Council refusal to let him build houses on his own land. He proposed to put them up opposite others that had been built before there was planning control. The backs of the proposed houses would be seen from the main Cambridge-London road, and the impression given would be one of continuous development from the start of Harston along two miles of roadway. Asked if he knew there had been complains about the smell from the nearby Pest Control, Mr Baynes said it was unusual that a site cannot be developed because somebody else is committing a nuisance.

Over Fen Committee are vigorously building up their case to present to the Land Commission in order to prevent Over and Bare fens being taken over by the Government. To illustrate what could happen Mr Mealling said he bought a smallholding near Caxton Gibbet ten years ago. As a war gesture he allowed it to be cultivated by the Government, who had later extended this War Emergency Act to 1950. "My land was taken over and ever since I have seen men skim the cream off my land while I sit there wanting a living", he said. The Vicar said there were 80 fields in Bare Fen of about 3 ½ acres which was extremely valuable to the owners and occupiers, as it provided out-wintering for stock for which there was no other accommodation. A motion that overtime on Saturdays for farm workers should operate from noon instead of 1pm was defeated at the Agricultural Wages Committee. Mr A.E. Cambridge shopkeepers were closing between 4.30 and 5 pm on Saturdays and that affected farming people who had to travel in

Sir – Has Smart's Row ever been condemned? My landlord is trying to make my house water-tight, but because the roof is dilapidated to such an extent that no contractor will undertake the job to put it right, every time there is a heavy rain I get flooded out. There are 13 houses in this Row and no matter how many of a family you have there is only one bedroom. It is impossible to get a 4ft 6in bed into the room, either by stairs or window – these are so small. There is no garden but a rat-infested back way. About 16 years ago a house was built on the main Newmarket-Norwich road. It was to accommodate the Chippenham constable and was put there because the Home Office said they wanted police houses to be on the man road. The house was two miles from any village, had no water laid on (but had a pump from its own well), had no electricity and a sewerage system that was "a little bit ancient". The constable who had been there a number of years had resigned and the Chief Constable knew that whoever he ordered into the house would at once give notice to terminate his employment. The Mayor of Cambridge, Ald W.G. James, spoke of the new town plan and said: "Planning has ceased to be a phase in our national existence; it tends to be a disease. Looking back through the ages I don't think Cambridge is really such a bad old town, and I think if the planning of our borough was left a little more to the people who live in it – and have to pay for that planning – that we should not make such a dreadful mess of it as people living outside think we might. Some of the current proposals are so drastic that if I come back in 100 years I shall not be able to recognise the Cambridge I knew. I believe in planning for the future, but to live in chaos for a generation for the sake of one's grandchildren is a little too altruistic"

One of England's favourite band leaders, Ted Heath, received a great welcome when he played in Cambridge for the first time last night at the Rex Ballroom. Heath fans turned up in their hundreds – the ballroom was filled to capacity – both to listen and dance to the music of this top-line combination. At times the volume of the band was rather too loud for the Rex – which was perhaps inevitable since it consists of 18 players, but, on the whole, the maestro regulated the tone extremely well. Cyril "Dreamin' of thee" Fletcher is certainly a "lad" in Alladin. Although surrounded by a number of talented people in this colourful show, Cyril is really the king-pin of the production and adopting in the main something of that amusing juvenile style, with attendant "blood-shot" voice for which he is famous, he may said to be the perky Peter Pan of patter. With fresh complexion, very expressive features, and startling arresting eyes, Cyril can be cherubic or piquantly elfish by turns, and all this is combined in a vivid, friendly, and eminently likeable personality that can piece the gloomy reserve of the most stolid of audiences with all the magic of radar

Another Christmas has come and gone. Sanitary arrangements and general conditions at Longstanton Church of England School were found to be in "a most deplorable condition" by an Inspector who visited after strong complaints from parents of children attending it. An attempt to find Heydon's "lost" borehole by means of a mine detector proved unsuccessful. The bore hole, sunk in the 1890s by South Essex Water Board and afterwards abandoned, is now sought by South Cambs. R.D.C. as being of possible use in a new water scheme. It is believed the bore was sealed with a metal plate which would cause a reaction in a mine detector if not too deeply buried. Some nails, part of an old mole trap and a broken ploughshare were all that was found.

Full details of a proposal to build a new Technical College at Trumpington road, Cambridge were submitted. The scheme calls for capital expenditure of over £1 m & has the full backing of the Ministry of Education. It is proposed to build in two stages, 1951-54 and 1954-57. Hopeless overcrowding in the existing premises has accounted for the fact that the scheme is being pressed. # c.36.7

100 years of service to the community by the Cambridge Building Society was celebrated with a centenary dinner. The Cambridgeshire Permanent Benefit Building Society was established 21st January 1850. Its first advance was £150 on ten cottages in Bottisham Lode. Ald James referred to the tragedy of the housing problem, describing it as like a hidden leprosy, undermining the social life of the country, breaking up homes and families and probably causing more communism than any political speeches. The possession by young married couples of their own homes would do a lot to prevent the breaking up of family life

Dr Alex Wood, chairman of Cambridge housing committee, spoke of the terrible need for housing. He quoted one case where a woman, her sister and one child were sleeping on the landing of a house, where her parents were sleeping in the only bedroom. The husband was not able to sleep in the house at all. There was another child expected for which there was no room at all. "That kind of case is fairly common", he said. There was no option but to use requisitioned or old property such as houses in Saxon Street

"I feel that beerhouses are an anachronism" said the Cambridge chief constable at the Borough licensing meeting. "They were invented in the days when spirits were very cheap and was done to prevent people from imbibing too much gin. Nowadays people can't afford too much spirits. Alan (I escape from anything anytime") Alan got all tied up in his work at the New Theatre last night. Two men, believed to be scaffolders, who were invited to tie up Alan for the rope trick in his act, made such a good job of it that he could not escape. Alan twisted and turned for 5 ½ minutes to untie the rope as he hung upside down over the stage, but with no avail. Then the producer of the show came on stage and told the customers that if Alan hung there any longer it would endanger his life. He called for a hand for the two men as this was the first time that Alan had been unable to escape in the stipulated time.

Will the character of Barton village - which has been likened in attractiveness to Grantchester and Madingley –be destroyed if a new estate of 200 houses is built half a mile outside it. This was one of the main points raised at an inquiry at Shire Hall. The developer argued that Barton at the moment was far from being attractively rural, because it consisted largely of council houses and the like, of which a large proportion were built in what might be unkindly described as yellow lavatory brick. Of course, Barton had a certain village life, but to imagine that it could have an independent life was completely unreal. The desperate plight of the people who as a last resort have been compelled to occupy, as squatters, the former RAF huts on the corner of Newmarket High Street and the Wood Ditton road was emphasised at Newmarket county court. The land on which the huts were built were originally leased to Mr R. Day, the trainer, and the Ministry requisition order took effect during the war, when the huts were occupied. After the war the premises were transferred to the Ministry of Works with the intention of housing certain agricultural workers – a scheme that was ultimately dropped. Nothing further was done and the Ministry eventually expressed a desire to derequisition the premises and clear the hutments from the site. In the meantime, however, squatters had taken over.

Chear Fen new pumping station opened. Gave up the ghost in attempting to cope with the 1947 floods. Since that time the Board have been engaged in the erection of an impressive and powerful new plant which will deal with an additional 8,000 acres with the formation of the Old West Drainage Board. Rampton and Willingham Drainage Board owned two stations within their present drainage area, the Smithy Fen and Chear Fen stations, both opened in 1842 and the latter consisting of a beam type steam engine powered by two boilers and coupled to a paddle wheel. After excellent service it ran for a short time during the 1947 floods then one of the boilers ceased to function and the other only showed £35 pressure. The plant was dismantled last year. In 1926 a new engine house was built and a Blackstone horizontal diesel engine installed of 65 horsepower coupled to a 24-in Gwynnes centrifugal pump. The new plant consisted of two Russell-Hornsby five-cylinder vertical diesel Gwynnes 30 inch axial flow pumps discharge pumps etc. The Board were carrying out the expenses until the new Old West area came into being. This is the first one of the first stations where the vertical engines were being installed. The new station was unique in design for the same area. It had vertical pumping engines and the pumps were of the vertical spindle type with the pump well below in the water 50 04 14(3)&4)ES # c.29

The naming ceremony of "The county of Cambridgeshire", a new kind of luxury double-deck vehicle owned by Premier Travel Ltd was performed by the chairman of the County Council. Tearing an adhesive strip off the small nameplate Ald Frost wished good luck to everyone who drives it. Afterwards he and other guests went for a ride in the coach. Its smooth running, luxury seating and smart appearance drew favourable comment. An unusual safety feature is the fitting of a pneumatic door normally opened by the driver. Magistrates were told that Mr Bell and his family of Littleport were having tea when a daughter cut a slice of bread from a new loaf. They saw some hairs and a little piece of flesh. The loaf was cut down the side and when opened there was a five-inch mouse just inside the crust. The baker gave them another loaf and the family were still trading with him. The baker said if he had known there was a mouse in the bread he would not have sold that particular dough, because he would not wish to damage his goodwill and trade.

A large white cob swan walked up Cambridge castle Hill and found himself for 15 minutes the focus of much interest from the police, the press, two cats and the borough pindar. He first attracted attention waddling up the hill in the middle of the road – much to the consternation of drivers and cyclists. Oblivious to the hazards of walking in the middle of a Cambridge street, he took a look through the Shire Hall's entrance, but after a critical appraisal of the building he decided to continue his journey. It was then shepherded into the county police station yard where it stood and glared at everything that moved. Two inquisitive ginger cats approached, sniffing at the strange interloper, but they did not stay long. Neck arched, wings beating and hissing the big bird chased them away.

Sir – It is with dismay we hear the Cambridge council's decision to defer the provision of outside lavatories for four-bedroomed council houses. Most of these have many occupants, in one case 14 in one house. Imagine the congestion and also the wear and tear of stair carpets; also think of the mother with several small children, up and down stairs, especially on wet days. Had the lavatory been built outside in the first place there probably would have never been an application for an extra lavatory.

Two Cambridge railwaymen, driver John Collingwood and guard Alfred Palmer have been awarded the "Daily Herald" Order of Industrial Heroism. The rescue which won them the "Workers VC" was made just a year ago at the Air Ministry's private siding at Lord's Bridge. Coming round a blind corner a goods train collided with a RAF motor lorry loaded with bombs. The driver was knocked unconscious and trapped in his cab; the petrol tank was smashed and petrol splashed onto the bonnet which was smoking fiercely. Cambridge was the hottest place in England with the temperature in the shade reaching 86 degrees. Byron's Pool was a favourite spot where picnickers, bathers and boaters turned up in their hundreds.

In the centre of the pool there was quite a large circle of reeds with dozens of fish mixed up in them. Non-bathers too, had occasional unpleasant moments whenever the slight breeze wafted up the decidedly unsavoury smell of the dead fish.

In the sweet perfection of a fine tuned evening on the Backs, a record crowd listened to what is surely the loveliest of all events of May Week, the programme of madrigals sung by the Cambridge University Madrigal Society from punts moored beneath King's Bridge. An audience estimated at between 7,000 and 8,000, lined both sides of the bank as the oppressive heat of the day became tempered by the cool of evening. Even the loud moo of a cow in the paddock failed to break the spell, nor did the faintly-threatening note of a high-flying bomber, reminder of the sterner world out of which the magic of the setting and the sweetness of the singing lifted the listening thousands.

Traffic congestion is not yet as serious in Cambridge as it is in some other towns. Except at peak hours a car can do the run from the University Arms to the Round Church in less than three minutes. But if within the next ten or twenty years cars become cheaper, and if the population of urban Cambridge continues to grow at its present rate, the volume of traffic in the centre may easily double. Current tendencies towards over-planning and regimentation were criticised by the Master of Downing College at Leys School speechday. Members of the 50 Car Club assembled for a night rally. Starting at 10.30 pm competitors were required to cover a road course of over 100 miles visiting various locations at each of which some obstacle had to be surmounted. The difficulties encountered were numerous – a lonely wood concealing one objective was haunted by ghostly moans and sinister music and another clue could be reached only by paddling in the Granta near Byron's Pool. A realistically-staged "road accident" brought horror to more than one competitor.

Using pre-cast and interlocking concrete blocks three men laid the equivalent of 3,000 bricks in just under 3½ hours on the Newmarket Road housing estate, Cambridge. The blocks, patented under the name of "Dri-Crete" are the results of research by Mr B. F. Hartley, director of the British Art Tile Co. of Mill Road. During 1950 two houses have been erected at the new satellite town of Newton Aycliffe, near Darlington, using the blocks. Members of the Dri –Crete Association visited Papworth to see farm buildings erected form the blocks and to Waterbeach RAF station to inspect Dri-Crete walls. # c.23

A two-hour deluge with thunder and lightning brought flood damage to many parts of Cambridge. Amongst offices flooded were those of the C.D.N. Trouble started when three drains ceased to cope with the water from a large pool which had formed. The overflow forced a way into one of the printing rooms and bundles of newspapers were hastily built around the rotary printing machine to prevent it being put out of action. Members of staff had to remove their socks and shoes and roll their trousers knee-high to bail out and deal with the blocked drains.

Teachers, parents and children gazed hopefully at the threatening skies when sudden rain held up the Rose Queen Festival presented by pupils of the Sawston village school. Happily it was only a passing shower and the Rose Queen (Beatrice Turner) and her attendants were able to open the ceremony with a procession which made up for anything the weather lacked in colour. After the Queen had been crowned by Mrs Elma De Bruyne she was entertained by a play in mime. Costumes were by Mrs Sharp and the choir was instructed by Mr E. Foster.

One of the most impressive firework displays seen in Cambridge since VJ Day came as a climax to the Pye Radio Jubilee Sports, held on the sports club ground. Starting at 2pm and lasting until midnight there was something to cater for all tastes – with the added attraction of a specially imported fairground complete with dodgems. A crowd estimated at 4,000 passed through the gates during the day and the refreshment tents and ice-cream sellers did record business.

Another freak summer storm swept across Cambridge leaving in its wake a trail of flooded houses and business premises. Firemen spent nine hours pumping 5,000 gallons of water from the basement of Frederick Day's the Hills Road hairdresser. He said: "It has cost me £100. A permanent waving machine and a dryer which were in the basement were completely ruined. I had to dump them on the tank-trap in Coldham's Lane this morning".

Newmarket High Street was lined for its entire length with stationery vehicles when an accident on the Bury Road brought traffic to a standstill. The town had been experiencing one of its busiest days for years. This unending stream was halted when an army convoy was brought to a stop just past the war memorial when a string of racehorses crossing the road caused the leading driver to pull up. The rear lorry was hit by a following taxi and this in turn was struck by a third vehicle.

Are men becoming sale minded? When Joshua Taylor's summer sale started there were a number of men waiting in the queue for the door to open. "It is the first time we have ever had men queuing" I was told. It appears that what they were after was shirts reduced from 35/6 to 25/- and 30/- to £1; a particularly natty line in pyjamas at ties and socks at almost half price. It is a sign of the hard-up times in which we live that the store is finding people more selective than ever.

Small landowners at Hardwick, meeting by the light of a single spluttering paraffin lamp at Childerley Gate School, decided unanimously to form an association to fight Government acquisition of land already under requisition at Hardwick. Isleham fen case before Agricultural Land Tribunal. 700 acres of land owned by 39 individuals were partially derelict when requisitioned in 1941 and production was extremely low. Reclamation work carried out by the Cambridge War Agricultural Executive Committee had resulted in the obliteration of many of the old boundaries. The soil was not good, much of it blew and it had not been found possible to lay down pasture which had any degree of permanency. Minister wanted to purchase the freehold which would be vested in the Agricultural Land Commission and farmed by selected tenants. The news that Mr Douglas Nicholes is disposing of his well-known drapery and outfitting business in Mill Road will be received with regret by local people who admire the pioneer spirit and enterprise of a family concern. There are still people who can remember the early days of what was then a small lock-up shop surrounded by fields – known as Feke's Meadows - on both sides of the roads on the town side. It is 68 years since Mr W.D. Nicholes founded the business. In those early days they were the largest wholesalers of foreign goods in East Anglia. The retail side was developed later and menswear has always been a speciality. # c.27.2

For nearly 60 years the cleaning of Stretham schools has been carried out by members of one family and with the retirement of Mrs H. Everitt and Mrs G. Woolf did the work and when, through increasing age, they were unable to continue, Mrs H. Everitt, their daughter, who had at times assisted her parents, and another daughter, Mrs. G. Vail, were appointed caretakers. When one remembers that during winter months fires have to be lit at an early hour to warm the buildings for a 9 o'clock school it will be realised that this meant constant effort which could become wearisome. What are your chances of finding a pair of nylons in your Christmas stocking? Very slender indeed unless you have your name down at a shop where you are personally known or happen to be on the spot when a supply comes in. There will be no extra supplies for Christmas. Gentlemen apparently no longer prefer blondes – unless they are of the natural variety. From my observation of the hatless heads which grace the streets of Cambridge I was surprised to find that the number of platinum blondes could be counted on the fingers of one hand. Hairdressers are rarely asked for bleaches these days. Most fashionable colour amongst the ladies today is dark gun-metal grey. And it is the young ones – those in their early twenties – who are the really enthusiastic followers of the new vogue. Runner-up in popularity is a warm chestnut colour

He'd had his prototype table shelter taken to Downing Street, Mr Churchill became interested in it and started to talk to him about it. After declaring that 500,000 of the shelters should be made in three months, Mr Churchill added: "Lower a house on top of one. Put a pig in it. Put the inventor in it". The first day of 1951 saw England upholding its best traditions of variety as far as weather is concerned. When the bells rang in the New Year there was one degree of frost, then the rain came, followed by frost, then came a blizzard and a thaw. Anyone walking in the streets looked like a snowman within five paces. Traffic was brought to a standstill in Newmarket. Roads were icy and some cyclists found it impossible in some places to ride their machines.

Some local shops have already started their January sales but there seems to be comparatively few shoppers about. There are good bargains and some goods are being sold at half price. With money as short as it is, women go to the sales in a strictly practical frame of mind. There was a long queue at a shop offering flannelette sheets, towels & tablecloths. Shoe departments are attracting buyers who have not yet forgotten the scarcity of leather during the war. One is offering odd pairs at less than half price.

A social worker for the Cambridge Association for the Care of Girls spoke to members of the Cambridge Inner Wheel. She said her work involved giving talks to girls in senior schools. In addition to questions about sex they would ask whether 10 was too young to start going out with boys and whether they should allow boys to kiss them on a first date. One lady said: “there is too much sex education given to children nowadays. Girls of my day were mostly ignorant of those things, yet they have succeeded in making a success of their marriages”

The weather when the Belfast Linen Warehouse started their January sale did not daunt the determination of housewives. A large queue was waiting for the doors to open. Therein was an abundance of real bargains at ‘slaughtered’ prices, for example full size down quilts with bedspreads to match were marked down from £12 15s. to £4 19s. The manager said: ‘The patience of the women during their uncomfortable vigil in the snow was truly remarkable. Everyone was in good humour. Not a grouse was heard from the customers or the good-tempered, much harassed assistants”

The Minister of Town and County Planning has compiled a list of buildings in Cambridge, which are afforded a degree of protection which they have not hitherto enjoyed. The Associated British Portland Cement Company sought sanction to develop new marl pits in the Coldham's Lane area and chalk quarrying at Lime Kiln Road, Cambridge, to ensure supply of raw materials to their Norman Works for the next 65 years. They were appealing against the County Council's refusal of their applications. It had been estimated it would be possible to work the present Lime Kiln Road quarry to a further depth of 40 feet. This would allow for an extra 71 years working. The residents of the Orchard Estate were very apprehensive about development planned to come up to their back gardens.

Congratulations from the town, University and church were showered upon the Cambridge branch of the Y.M.C.A. at a special luncheon to commemorate the foundation of the birth exactly 100 years ago. The Mayor said he had personally known the Y.M.C.A. for at least half of its existence in Cambridge and had seen with great pride its growth. He referred to their object of helping in the spiritual side of a young man's life and their wish to make them grow up into healthy, strong and virile young men. In the 1914-18 war they went to great lengths to provide entertainment for the troops. # c.37.9

A Littleport potato crisp manufacturer, carrying on business at Angle Works, Ely, told the Bankruptcy court he had started at Ely in March 1949; in July 1950 he was went with his wife for a holiday on a Mediterranean cargo boat. The business was left in the hands of his father and a friend, neither of whom was experienced. He came home to find the business closed down and most of the assets disposed of.

The Ministry of Health has asked Addenbrooke's Hospital to reduce capital estimates and certain projects will have to be postponed The most important was the new operating theatre, delivery wards and premature baby unit which it was hoped would be built in 1952 at the maternity hospital. But authority had been received to enter into contracts to acquire 43,895 acres of land lying between Hills Road and Long Road for the site of a proposed new hospital.

Last-minute disclosure of what councillors described as the "astonishing", "fantastic" and "mad" extent of proposed salary increases to chief officers of Cambridgeshire County Council was made at a meeting. They involved increases of some 50%. The council rejected proposals of which would have increased the salaries of the Education Officer & County Treasurer from £1,460 to £2,200 & that of the County Surveyor from £1,260 to £2,200. The new scales had been adopted by 22 other councils.

An agricultural conference at Cambridge expressed grave concern at the inadequate meat ration allocated to agricultural workers. Even before the recent cut the amount of meat given to them was not sufficient for their duties in all weathers. In the town other industrial workers could eat in restaurants or buy fish and chips, but farm workers were not able to take advantage of these facilities as they were too remote. Speakers pointed out the advantage of British meat and said home-produced beef meant less risk of foot-and-mouth disease.

Damage by death-watch beetles to the tower of St Andrew's church, Cherry Hinton, is so serious that all the main beams in the tower will have to be replaced. The woodwork in the rest of the church has already been treated with insecticide but further trouble has been brought to light during repairs to tiles on the roof. They were 250 years old and had in the past, as an economy measure, been turned over and refixed instead of being renewed. Consequently they were now crumbling. # c.83

An appeal against refusal of permission for Messrs. Maudes caterers of 25 Petty Cury, Cambridge, to erect a neon sign has been dismissed. The appeal related to the display of a vertical neon sign above fascia level on the front elevation of a dignified building. The Minister considers that notwithstanding the commercial character of the locality, the sign is out of keeping with the buildings of architectural and historical interest in the vicinity

In 1946 an architect, then working for the Ministry of Works, designed and built a house at Lt Abington. He then decided to continue building and South Cambs R.D.C. gave him permission to erect 44 houses on a nine-acre site in the village. At a public inquiry the Cambridgeshire County Council (who took over planning powers in July 1948) applied for an order revoking the permission. Because he could not get licences for the 44 houses the man proposed to put up a prefabricated permanent bungalow and keep 500 pigs. The enquiry heard from several people protesting against the development.

Modern machinery has already done much to revolutionise food manufacture, and the tremendous advances it has brought to bread-making – from the old days when a baker kneaded dough all night in a hot, often unhygienic bakehouse, to today when bread can be made between mid-day and midnight, entirely by machine and practically untouched by hand, was demonstrated by Mr George Hawkins at the new automatic plant for bread making installed at the Model Bakery, Parsonage Street, Cambridge.

A journey, in many ways reminiscent of those made during the war, was repeated by members of the Romas Concert Party. This time it was not through the black-out to some remote RAF site or searchlight emplacement, but to the Cutter Inn, Ely, where they celebrated their reunion dinner. Over 500 shows had been presented for the forces between 1940 and D-Day. They had overcome transport difficulties by commandeering a meat van with a pheasant on the side.

Cambridge Council is to recommend a scheme for a multi-deck car park at the Lion Yard. The Surveyor suggests all adjoining property owned by the council should be demolished, the opportunity being taken to widen Corn Exchange Street and St Tibb's Row and that the possibility of further extensions to St Andrew's Hill for offices, shops or increased car park facilities should be borne in mind. He submitted a plan showing a building of six floors which could accommodate 825 cars # c.49.62

The roadway at High Street, Chesterton, will be improved at an estimated cost of £1,300. Coun G. Edwards said that having lived there for nearly 71 years he realised the gravity of the position. "This bottleneck in the High Street coming from Chesterton Road constitutes one of the gravest dangers in the borough. The setting back of the wall and making the corner into Union Lane a little wider would be a godsend to the residents", he said

In twelve minutes on Saturday Cambridge town council took the first step to acquire city status for the borough, and thus to remedy a situation which makes the town the only ancient seat of learning in England and Scotland to be without a title. The twelve minutes was the time taken to introduce and pass at a special meeting of the Council a resolution to submit to the King a petition to grant to the Borough the title of City. It would make no difference to its status, powers or otherwise in the field of local government # c.35.7

An appeal for the introduction of "a colossal scheme of temporary housing" to try and surmount the present housing difficulties in Cambridge was made by the chairman of the Cambridge Housing Society. The need for two-bedroomed houses is still desperate and young married couples with no children who applied for a council house in the latter part of 1946 still have to wait two or three more years, they report # c.23

Cambridge has some 150 inn signs hanging outside licensed premises. It is probable that Cambridge was the first place where public house signs were made compulsory by law. An Act passed in 1430 laid down "whoever shall brew ale in the town of Cambridge with intention of selling it must hang out a sign, otherwise he shall forfeit his ale. The Eagle and Child in Bene't Street was called by irreverent undergraduates "The Bird and Baby". There was also a "Swan and Sugarloaf", (now the Still and Sugarloaf) which was nicknamed the Duck and Acid Drop.

Ely Road council houses resident discover the water pump situate in a small enclosure in one of the gardens had disappeared during the night. It had not been in use for some years. The high price paid for scrap made is supposed to be the reason for several being uprooted, some from fields where they were still needed for supplying drinking water to cattle

The Cambridge Plate Glass Mutual Insurance Society has reached its centenary and this important milestone is being observed by the waiving of premiums for 1951. It was founded to defray the expense of accidents to plate glass windows and the first meeting was held at the King's Head Inn, Sidney Street.

The annual ceremony on top of Cambridge castle mound at 7.30 am on Eastern Sunday morning is becoming traditional. The company sings 'Christ the Lord is Risen Today' and then asks for God's blessing on Cambridge and its people. The event originated with Victoria Road Congregational Church and was intended to be a simple act of cheerful witness to the Easter message. Now it is attended by people from many churches. It has been held annually for the past five years and attracts around 50 people. It is strangely impressive to look over the quiet town in the light of early morning and to hear the words of Christian faith lifting from the hilltop to be carried far and wide.

In its hundred years of history the Varsity boat race has seen many strange results but never such an astonishing fiasco as that experienced on Saturday. It was the only race of them all in which a Varsity crew have had to leave their boat and swim for it soon after the start and the umpire has therefore declared the race void. The Oxford crew could not be picked up before their boat had overturned and several of them swam to their launch while others clung to the upturned boat until they were pulled out of the water. The Light Blues paddled to the Boat House and had difficulty in lifting their craft out of the water because of the weight of water inside it.
